An innovation in theatre operation that may be one of the answers to criticism regarding the story content of films shown to children has been established by Albert Galston of the Hawaii Theatre in Hollywood through the inauguration of a special 16-mm. film show for youngsters up to 12 years of age who see the performance in a newly arranged balcony theatre, within the main theatre itself, while the parents are enjoying more sophisticated film entertainment on the main floor.

The idea for the new policy was originated locally by John Dumbrille who, finding Galston enthusiastically receptive, then won the approval of the Parent-Teachers Association and the Board of Education.

Arrangements were made to feature "Jeep Herders," an all color production, supplemented by suitable shorts. Pat Michaels, star of "Jeep Herders," was secured for a personal appearance. Michaels, wounded six times during the war, was idolized by the children.

Both adult and kid's shows are timed so that "breaks" occur simultaneously. Showings are given regularly Friday nights and Saturday afternoons.

Tri-States Setting Up School for Veterans

A training school for veterans of World War II which will afford the students financial assistance while training for qualified positions in the industry, is being set up by Tri-States Theatres Corp., Des Moines, under the GI Bill of Rights. The Iowa State Department of Public Instruction has already approved the school under the Veterans' Administration Program.

Under the contemplated setup, students will be trained for one year in such phases of theatre operation as personnel, advertising, buying, booking, projection, programs, accounting and maintenance, both in the classroom and in the theatre under qualified company personnel.

Former employes of Tri-States who served in the war will be also eligible for the training.

Hold Staff Meetings

Regular staff meetings will improve service in any theatre. Some executives hold these meetings weekly, some semi-monthly. Suit the intervals to the individual situation, but by all means hold the meetings!

Sticker Avoids Stick-up

To combat the current wave of theatre burglaries and hold-ups, H. J. Cleary, chief accountant of Loew's Theatres, has supplied the circuit's houses with quantities of small stickers, boldly imprinted in red, to be pasted on doors of theatre safes and on the inside of office doors. The stickers are potent reminders and read, respectively: "Is your SAFE locked?" and "Is your DOOR locked?" Simple but potently effective.

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

SERVE THEM AND THEY'LL SERVE YOU

By Jack Jackson

Whether the theatreman operates in a big city or a small town, his opportunities are limitless for public relations work of the kind that insures him a bulwark of goodwill to serve him when there are threats of unfair taxation or discriminatory regulation. That is the contention (and there is marshalled impressive evidence to support the claim) in this stimulating and idea-provoking article in a continuing series written exclusively for this publication by one of the film industry's outstanding theatremen. Here's food for thought as well as practical suggestion.

I've been focusing the high-intensity spotlight on Public Relations so relentlessly for the past couple of weeks, that I am a trifle hesitant about taking you for another ride in my cry-buggy to show you the glaring signals of "trouble a'brewing."

These signs are as plain as Durante's proboscis. Even a casual glance through the columns of the daily press and periodical trade publications will convince you that my "wolf" cry is not only justified but deserves four-alarm rating. Theatremen, for entirely too long, have been content to be known as "good fellows" and have not extended themselves to strengthen acquaintances into friendships and cement the friendships into binding mutual affections. Now the time is at hand when the activities we have indulged in passively under the headings of contacts, good will, etc., etc., must be merged into a conglomerate whole that can be broadened and multiplied into a satisfactory Public Relations department. Remember, it's not enough just to do a good deed. You have to make a lot of noise about it and let everybody know—in every possible way—that you and your theatre figured prominently in the "this and that" of the progress or development of your community and its institutions.

You have to get away from that old "hide your light under a bucket" idea, because modern public relations consist of: FIRST, doing a good job; SECOND, telling everybody about it.

If you happen to be one of those hard-to-convince guys who feel that the old system is good enough for you and that your "good fellow" raincoat will keep you dry when the gale starts blowing, let me give you just two facts about how the really great and imposing American institutions feel about healthy and adequate Public Relations.

Public Relations Activities Found Most Important

Uncle Sam used a public relations corps of 48,000 men from the Army and Navy alone to "sell" his war activities to a people whose very lives and homes depended on the outcome. The railroads bought themselves back into public favor after years of disrepute with a million-dollar-a-year institutional advertising campaign that made the public conscious of the great public service strides being made in improved equipment, safety signals, etc. General Motors, American Tel and Tel, the American Red Cross and literally thousands of other tremendous organizations are finding Public Relations one of the most important of their activities.

If you happen to be in doubt as to what you may have done that merits a little self back-patting just take a peek in your memory book at what the Texas Company did a few years ago when they had everybody squirming and wriggling for miles looking for the filling stations with the red (Texaco) star in order to be assured of nice clean toilets.

Just in case the above facts fail to make you conscious of the vital necessity of leak-proof public relations, let me cite a few instances where theatre owners have profited by holding the key to the affections of the people of their vicinity. (Names are withheld for obvious reasons but the incidents related are true in every detail.)

Some years ago a now prominent theatre operator had over-extended himself and found it necessary to accept partnership with a bigger and more financially sound company. As time passed the big fellow started making it a little tougher and tougher each month and finally determined on forcing the partnership into receivership in full confidence that his company would get the court appointment to supervise the theatres founded and nursed to popularity by their little partner. The little fellow told his troubles to his stockholders and they in turn passed the information and their recommendations to men of high judicial connections who also knew the little fellow as a fine and outstanding specimen of local citizenship. When the big fellow exposed his cards he found the deck stacked against his usurious maneuver and was flatly told, by authority he could not question, that if he went further with his plans they would name the little man to the supervisory post. That partnership still stands in its original status and it is one of the most successful in the industry. But the only thing the little fellow can thank for his "near miss" from being left out in the cold is GOOD PUBLIC RELATIONS.

Having No Government Trouble

Now let me tell you another from the other side of the tracks. One of the larger chain operators practically controlled a city where a few small theatres still struggled against the almost insurmountable opposition. Instances were frequent where the little chaps badly needed certain pictures—to play on the days when they had a chance to make best profits—where all available prints were scheduled for use in theatres in other towns belonging to the big chain. The big man heard of their dilemma and instructed his booking department to, wherever possible, change the out-of-town programs so that the desired films could be released to the little fellows. This kind of treatment eventually brought the smaller men to the conclusion that cooperation with the chain was far more to be desired—and promised happier conditions—than opposition with the result that fine, new theatres now grace the sites of the old "dumps" and the little fellows are full-fledged partners in enterprises of which they and their communities are justly proud. This big chain is having no Government trouble and is threatened with none because of GOOD PUBLIC RELATIONS.

You're going to need public relations of the highest order to combat and defeat—or at least get a good truce out of those before-mentioned things that threaten in 1946. To those listed in previous articles I'd like to add a couple that are just getting into stride in public print, the reduced Federal tax bill recently "hoppered" in Congress together with the well-laid plans of municipalities to levy on admissions and the published intention of Standard Brands to deliver home entertainment on a national scale to the druggists and grocers they serve.

Let me say right here that all of the tax and competitive effort being contemplated is not the outgrowth of malice. A goodly portion is just considered good business by the commercial firms, and the men responsible for the tax planning are—to a great extent—unconscious of the harm it will do your business and the burden it will place on your customers. And, that's where (if your public relations horse is well trained and in good condition) you can show a clean pair of heels to the pursuers who would deplete your bankroll and ride home to new glory and added revenue.

If the grocers and druggists have been properly inoculated with your GOOD PUBLIC RELATIONS they will tell the Standard Brands representative about your theatre and suggest that the shows be exhibited on your premises during off-theatre hours. They'll be selling the efficiency of your equipment and the comforts of your theatre. After all—if you've done a good job—you're their pal and they don't want to hurt you. So-o-o, you find yourself being paid for the use of your premises during a period when they would be idle and basking in the always desirable position of giving the folks a free show to say nothing about the opportunity to display the trailers on your coming attractions.

Will Oppose the Ordinance

If the folks are made aware of what it means to each family's pocketbook to defeat any discriminatory tax measure directed against the theatre and not other business, they will militantly oppose the ordinance or whatever form in which the tax is presented at the polls. And (again, if you've done a good job) if municipal heads are made aware of the fact that your business and its customers absorbed the excessive Federal 20 percent tax as a wartime duty, and with the same spirit with which you and your patrons bought war bonds and stamps, they'll be hesitant about laying the town's budget deficit on your doorstep and find fairer means of raising the needed revenue.

In your own files and in your own memory you have every possible kind of ammunition with which to slay the hordes that threaten your continued success and profits. But, you have to do something to ready your attack—to soften the opposition walls against which you will have to direct your fire and GOOD PUBLIC RELATIONS is a super-softener.

One more example of what GOOD PUBLIC RELATIONS can do and how important that branch of modern business has become and I'll quit harping on the subject.

Everybody remembers the extremely bad public reaction to the published reports of Standard Oil's embarrassing cartels with the German controlled I.G. Farbenindustrie. For a while it looked as though the American public would avoid Standard Oil merchandise as though it were labeled with the familiar skull and cross bones. The company regained public favor quickly by calling its salesmen off the road and training them as public speakers familiar with all details of the company's foreign connections. These salesmen took Standard's story to service clubs, women's clubs and other appropriate groups and succeeded not only in covering the smear but reversing public opinion by laying stress on the excellent war job the company was doing.

I said I'd quit after that but a letter just laid on my desk serves as such an excellent illustration of what theatre men can do to endear themselves to the people of a community that emulation is recommended to every theatre manager everywhere.

Cahalan Cited for Activities

The letter comes from F. J. Cahalan who manages the Magnet Theatre in Claremont, N. H. The town is pretty tiny (the only Atlas I have at hand gives it a population of 12,144) yet Cahalan has done a public relations job that is certain to take top prize among the many big and little theatre operators of my acquaintance. Briefly he holds the following honored civic posts and has engaged in and excelled at the following civic activities:

Chairman, Claremont Red Cross Disaster Relief and Civilian War Aid.

Chairman, American Red Cross Blood Donors (and he made five personal donations to the blood plasma bank.)

Chairman, Public Service, Office of Price Administration.

Director, Claremont Chamber of Commerce.

Member, New Hampshire Legislation 1945-46, Rehabilitation Committee.

Member, Hospital Advisory Board.

Chairman and sponsor for funds for War Veterans Memorial Home.

Chairman and sponsor raising funds for Xmas presents to service folks.

Sponsor of movement to get New Hampshire National Guard home after 3 years overseas service.

Conducting personal correspondence with servicemen and leading participant in War Loan Drives.

Now, Mr. Reader of this article, is there any one of the above posts that were not available for you or that you can't successfully fill? You tell me who you think is the MR. BIG of Claremont and what chance there would be of anybody or any group doing anything that would hurt the theatres Mr. Cahalan manages? And the reason: GOOD PUBLIC RELATIONS. Just take this guy Cahalan as a model and see how closely you can come to hitting his stride.

FROM GROUND UP. John Stembler, Jr. and Frederick Storey, ex-servicemen, who are joining the Georgia Theatres Co. to "learn the theatre business from the ground up," according to William K. Jenkins, president.

Two Ex-Servicemen Join L&J Theatres

Two ex-servicemen last week started to learn the theatre business from the ground up as members of the Georgia Theatres Company. The association of John Stembler, Jr., and Frederick Storey with the circuit came in an announcement by William K. Jenkins, president.

"The boys are coming into the business to learn it from the ground up," said Jenkins. "They will have no titles until they earn them. They will start by learning how to keep a theatre clean, advancing from there."

Stembler, son-in-law of Jenkins and a former United States district attorney at Miami, held the rank of lieutenant colonel during the war. Storey, until recently a combat commander in the Navy, is the son-in-law of the late Arthur Lucas, co-founder with Jenkins of Lucas & Jenkins Theatres, which later became the Georgia Theatre Company. Operating the Fox, Paramount, Capitol and Roxy in Atlanta, the firm has local community circuits and is affiliated with theatres in nearly every Georgia community.

Following the appointments of Stembler and Storey, Jenkins also announced the promotion of Newman (Moon) Corker, former city manager at Gainesville and Athens, to Athens district manager. Corker's headquarters will be in Athens, where he will supervise theatre operations in that city and at Gainesville, Buford and Elberton.

Maintain a Record of All Lost and Found Articles

An easily obtainable note book to record lost and found articles should be kept in every theatre .Devote one page for each day that articles are reported lost or found in the theatre and include a general description of the articles referred to.

When a patron reports a loss, first aid in the search for it in the vicinity of the seat held by the patron. If this is not successful, record the description under the appropriate date, with the patron's name, address and telephone number so that he may be informed if the article subsequently turns up.

Also record a description of found articles on the page devoted to the day the article was found. This is an added service and will be much appreciated by patrons.

Watch for Corrosion

Ladders to and on the theatre roof are subject to corrosion and should be given a coat of lead paint at least once yearly.

Advisory Board Heads Beacon 'Matinee Club'

Many educational organization leaders of New York City have been appointed to the Advisory Board of the Beacon Theatre's "Children's Saturday Matinee Club" which made its New York Cty debut at that theatre.

Included on the Board are: Mrs. Marie Hamilton, Director, Schools Motion Picture Committee; Mrs. Esther Spyer, Chairman, Motion Picture Committee, United Parents Assn.; Mrs. Hilda Oseas, Asst., Principal, P. S. 186, Manhattan; Mrs. Eileen Doolan, International Federation of Catholic Alumnae; Mrs. Elizabeth Flower, Protestant Council, and Mrs. Kathleen Bernath, Child Study Association of America.

This group meets monthly to decide programs and evaluate films that are shown in preceding weeks. A nurse and special matrons are in attendance to oversee the junior patrons at three performances which are held each Saturday at 10:45, 1:00 and 3:15. Adults are admitted only if accompanied by a child.

Featured in the opening program were two Technicolor featurettes, five Technicolor cartoons, and a stage attraction presenting trained dogs. A clown named "Happy" greeted all children as they entered the theatre.

SUPER SALESMEN. G. Farris Squibb, right, manager of the J. G. Long Circuit's Dixie and Gem Theatres, Coleman, Texas, shown with E. R. Griffith, County Clothing Chairman, on the steps of the Dixie Theatre where part of a huge collection of wearing apparel may be seen. Clothing was collected at a special children's morning matinee performance in cooperation with the Victory Clothing Collection for Overseas Relief.

Clothing Collection Cooperation Results in Top Institutional Buildup for Squibb's Dixie

Donating the facilities of a theatre to a civic function has long been held one of the best ways to institutionalize the theatre, to aid in making it the center of activity of the community. By recognizing the value of this kind of promotion, Manager G. Farris Squibb of the J. G. Long Circuit's Dixie and Gem theaters in Coleman, Texas, placed the Dixie squarely in the eyes of every Coleman resident and at the same time was instrumental in obtaining a large quantity of clothing for the Victory Clothing Collection for Overseas Relief in the national campaign just concluded.

By arrangement with County Clothing Chairman E. R. Bill Griffith, Squibb arranged to make the Dixie the center of the juvenile collectors' activities by setting up a free Saturday morning cartoon and comedy show for youngsters, with admission to be given only on receipt of two wearable pieces of clothing of any size or description. He was nearly overwhelmed on the morning of the show when the youngsters appeared in droves an hour before the opening, their arms loaded with wearing apparel for the drive.

Plans for the campaign were arranged several weeks in advance with the first full-page newspaper advertising breaking two weeks in advance in both dailies and duplicated one week in advance. All costs of the advertising were borne by merchants whose names were listed in small type at the bottom of the ad.

The newspapers were also generous, providing publicity on the drive's progress from time to time and carrying short news stories on front pages the day before the matinee performance.

In addition to donating the theatre's facilities Squibb prepared thousands of boldly printed throwaways, the top half of which advertised regular attraction, playdates and prices. Every home in the entire city was reached by these handbills.

DRIVE RESULTS. This huge pile of wearing apparel was collected by G. Farris Squibb, manager of the J. G. Long Circuit's Dixie and Gem Theatres, Coleman, Texas, at the Dixie Theatre's special matinee show for children at which two articles of clothing were the admission price. Theatre facilities were donated in cooperation with the Victory Clothing Collection for Overseas Relief.

THE BOX OFFICE SLANT

Sentimental Journey

20th Century-Fox Drama 94 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Depending upon susceptibility to sentiment this is a one- to four-handkerchief picture. The femmes are sure to enjoy it and its down-to-earth sentimentality will have appeal for all but the toughest males. Children probably will not appreciate its charm.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Marquee names guarantee this a fair chance and it probably will develop into a good box-office bet when feminine word-of-mouth publicity has had an opportunity to circulate.

Cast: John Payne, Maureen O'Hara, William Bendix, Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Glenn Langan, Mischa Auer, Connie Marshall, Kurt Krueger, Trudy Marshall, Ruth Nelson, Dorothy Adams, Mary Gordon, Lillian Bronson, Olive Blakeney, James Flavin, William Haade, Mary Field, Byron Foulger, George E. Stone, John Davidson. Credits: Directed by Walter Lang. Produced by Walter Morosco. Screenplay by Samuel Hoffenstein and Elizabeth Reinhardt. Based on a story by Nelia Gardner White. Photography, Norbert Brodine.

Plot: Knowing she is about to die, a young actress decides to adopt a little girl in order to leave behind someone who can take care of the husband who needs her so much. Child and husband do not understand each other as well as the wife expected, but after her death it is the child who helps the stricken man find himself.

Comment: While this is an exceptionally well produced and directed picturization of a highly imaginative story, it requires a little better than normal audience intelligence to completely appreciate it. The outstanding performances of Maureen O'Hara, John Payne, William Bendix and particularly of newcomer Connie Marshall keep the screenplay within the bounds of audience acceptability and prevent the film from becoming completely unbelievable. Although occasionally slow moving, "Sentimental Journey" is for the most part a fine picturization of a theme that Director Walter Lang has handled with sympathy and understanding. Its highly emotional moments of deep sympathy for Payne, bereft of the wife he had loved deeply for five years, are well established. His dullness and lack of reaction to his friends and surroundings and to Connie's efforts to snap him out of his lethargy necessarily move slowly, but they serve a definite purpose in establishing Payne's character and his reasons for not understanding the ratiocinations of the sensitive, fable-ridden child. William Bendix is capable in an important supporting role, and other good performances are turned in by Sir Cedric Hardwicke, Mischa Auer, Kurt Kruger and Trudy Marshall. While "Sentimental Journey" may not be readily comprehended and enjoyed by average audiences, no one will fail to appreciate the fine acting of the principals or the unusual talents of Connie Marshall, a youngster who has none of the objectionable characteristics of the average screen juvenile. Marquee names should guarantee the film a fair chance, and it will probably develop into a good box-office bet when feminine word-of-mouth publicity has had a chance to circulate.

Bad Bascomb

MGM Western 110 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) The fans of Wallace Beery and Margaret O'Brien will be more than delighted with the teaming of these two in a film that should please all types of audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: With its marquee names and wide audience appeal this should do good business in most communities.

Cast: Wallace Beery, Margaret O'Brien, Marjorie Main, J. Carrol Naish, Frances Rafferty, Marshall Thompson, Russell Simpson, Warner Anderson, Donald Curtis, Connie Gilchrist, Sara Haden, Renie Riano, Jane Green, Henry O'Neill, Frank Darien. Credits: Directed by S. Sylvan Simon. Produced by Orville O. Dull. Screenplay by William Lipman and Grant Garrett from an original story by D. A. Loxley. Photography, Charles Schoenbaum.

Plot: Following a frustrated raid on a small town bank Wallace Beery (Bad Bascomb), J. Carrol Naish, a renegade white man and Marshall Thompson, a young and reluctant member of the Bascomb gang, in the guise of converts join a Mormon caravan trekking to Utah. They are accepted at face value and then plan to steal the caravan's gold, earmarked for the building of a hospital at the caravan's destination. The charm of little Margaret O'Brien softens Beery who shoots Naish when he attempts to escape with the gold. Naish and a band of Indians attempt to raid the wagon train which is saved by Beery and the soldiers of a nearby military post. Federal officers accompanying the soldiers identify Beery, who is permitted to tell the Mormons that he is leaving on important business. Thompson reforms and marries Frances Rafferty.

Comment: Beery does one of his better acting jobs in this as the notorious outlaw Zeb Bascomb, who is alternately hard as nails and soft as mush, particularly concerning young Miss Margaret O'Brien. The youngster has gained considerably in acting ability, portraying a mischievous, lovable brat who wraps Beery around her little finger in most convincing style. The film has been given the utmost in production values, although most of the action takes place on location. Sylvan Simon's directorial efforts leave little to be desired despite the slow pace of the early sequences. J. Carrol Naish does a standout portrayal as a vicious renegade white man, brought up from childhood by Indians and whose character has been invested with all that is bad and nothing that possibly could be interpreted as good. Marjorie Main, in an unimportant role, and Frances Rafferty and Marshall Thompson, who provide a minor love interest, are capable in their assignment. All minor parts are well cast. The action picks up pace after a slow start and provides moments of high excitement during the Indian raid and flashes of approaching cavalry hurrying to the inevitable rescue. The film becomes a little trite here, but the action fans will love it.

STR INDEX FOR 1945

I Love a Bandleader

Columbia Musical 70 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) A lighthearted musical comedy that keeps plot and acting in the background, with emphasis on music and fast tempo.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Good name values in Rochester and Phil Harris, who both established popularity on Jack Benny radio program. Well known songs in picture will help word-of-mouth campaign, too.

Cast: Phil Harris, Eddie "Rochester" Anderson, Leslie Brooks, Walter Catlett, Frank Sully, James Burke, The Four Vs. Credits: Produced by Michel Kraike. Directed by Del Lord. Screenplay by Paul Yawitz from a story by John Gray. Photography, Frank Planer.

Plot: A painter accidentally falls, losing his memory. In the course of his spell of amnesia, he acquires a doctor who helps him get a bandleading job in an effort to determine his true identity, a girl friend who uses him at first to climb the ladder to singing success, and a bodyguard who really knows who he is. The bodyguard hits him on the head again to restore him to reality.

Comment: This picture reveals more than the ordinary share of entertainment for its budget possibilities. The songs are pre-sold, having been juke-box and record favorites before the picture was released. Good, Good, Good, as well as Harris' perennial ditty, That's What I Like About the South, and Look at That, well sung by the Four Vs, are top-notch tunes. Harris and Rochester work well, garnering plenty of laughs. Plot construction is weak, but the film covers that deficiency handily by throwing in plenty of musical numbers and keeping the tempo fast. Miss Brooks screens well, but is too wooden in her portrayal. Producer Michel Kraike deserves a bow.

The Hoodlum Saint

MGM Drama 93 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) A timely tale of a returned soldier that carries a message of faith. Good entertainment for those who enjoy William Powell and James Gleason and like to look at Esther Williams.

BOX OFFICE SLANT: The box-office value of the names makes this a sure-fire offering for any situation.

Plot: A returned veteran of World War I finds it difficult to get a job. Failing to get his old newspaper job, he gets a position through gaining false admission to a society wedding where he meets the right people. From then on he climbs high in the financial world, but never forgetting his unfortunate pals. In desperation he uses the patron Saint Dismas to keep the men out of trouble, and their belief in the Saint's help eventually helps him when he is down-and-out.

Comment: The William Powell name, always a draw, plus the added popularity of Esther Williams since the release of "Thrill of a Romance," make this film a sure-bet offering for any situation. And the picture would have lived up to the expectations of

Opening Doors, Standing Aside Outmoded, Says Ferguson; Sees Return of Showmanship

Predicting a return to "old fashioned showmanship" which, he said, would be inevitable "as soon as the boom fades out," W. R. Ferguson, MGM director of exploitation, addressing the concluding session of 32 salesmen and exploiteers from the west and south last Friday, warned that "the attitude of the theatre owner to just open his doors and stand aside is outmoded."

"Getting over a campaign means rolling up your sleeves and getting down to work," said Ferguson. "Showmanship depends on the least number of blanks you shoot when every shot counts. The exhibitor must fight for every poster location and there should be a change of pace in his activities to keep alive. He should change the size and position of his posters to attract attention. Even the color of his lights should be changed frequently. He should increase his advertising space and he should be active in local community affairs. The war proved that, for many theatre owners who participated in various activities were known for what they did."

Ferguson pointed out that the re-population of small communities will re-vitalize the neighborhood and suburban theatres, thus putting many closed theatres back in business. It will be up to every salesman and exploiteer, he said, to help the theatre secure the maximum share of patronage which drifted downtown and out of town with the population shift during the "easy money" days.

"It's essential to keep showmanship a living, breathing thing," he said. "The bigger the picture the bigger the campaign has been an accepted rule of long standing. However, many a sleeper has proved profitable for all when some new angle of promotion has been ferreted out and promoted to the hilt. So keep up in front thinking and planning all the time. Don't overlook anything that has the essence of a good idea, for the small things can be as effective as the big ones, if handled properly."

During Friday's session, Ferguson announced that he will award special prizes for the 12 best promotional ideas submitted each month by MGM salesmen.

SALES APPEAL. This exceptionally attractive window display was set by Shea's Buffalo Theatre coincident with the showing of Warner's "My Reputation." Basis of the tieup was a play on the title with the display card in the window reading, "My reputation for Hats Is Tops!"

Blumenstock Sets Up New Exploitation Unit at Studio

Mort Blumenstock, Warner Bros. vice-president in charge of advertising and publicity, has set up a new exploitation unit at the studio, under studio publicity director Alex Evelove, to handle exploitation, radio and special events. Ben Cohn, member of the Warner publicity department in New York and Hollywood for the past seven years, heads the new department. He will be assisted by Maury Melford, former Chicago publicity man. Frank Phillips, ex-magazine editor and publicity man, takes over Cohn's former duties.

Dailies 'Taken Over' For Theatre Opening

The amazing total of 12 full-page cooperative ads, eight feature stories, more than a dozen photographs, two full pictorial pages, and one editorial, in two daily newspapers, publicized and highlighted the grand opening of the Ritz Theatre, Belleville, Ill., operated by Wesley, Frank and Tom Bloomer.

The Bloomer management concentrated their efforts on everything and everyone in Belleville, and the culmination of their work was undeniably successful. Figuratively speaking, the town's two dailies were "taken over" lock, stock and barrel, with the splendiferous display of newsprint and pictures.

Feature stories "placed" by the management pointed out the comfortable, modern-designed features of the Ritz, with photos supporting every claim. Publicity releases exploited the opening-night feature in a dozen forms, high-spot of which was a life-time pass tendered to the baby born at a certain hour during the opening. One of the papers ran an editorial which praised the theatre as a "progressive business" and an excellent civic achievement.

Practically every merchant in the city paid personal tribute to the house and its organization in a score of cooperative ads which took up half the news space of the papers.

Reputation Sale Tieup Highlights Evansville 'Reputation' Campaign

Spotlighting the long-established reputation of the concern, a Merchandise Reputation Sale was held by the Muir Drug Store, Evansville, Ind., in connection with the opening of Warners' "My Reputation" at the Grand Theatre. Ten thousand heralds, with film and playdate information as well as notice of the sale, were distributed in the cooperative campaign.

In another tieup with De Jong's Ladies Shop the picture received a boost through a display of spring styles by "Designers of Reputation." Embodying a play on the word "reputation," teaser ads were employed in both local newspapers several days in advance of the opening.

BALLYHOO. This colorful and very audible sound truck toured New York City during the Loew theatre circuit's showing of "The Last Chance." The Loew circuit used every publicity medium available to plug what they considered to be one of the season's best films. Film opened at the Criterion and truck's dateline was changed later for circuit showing.

J. L. & M. Lee Terror History in Warners' coming Super-Mystery!

Fine Campaigns Marking Opening Of 'Snafu' in Two Communities

A world premiere at Bay City, Mich., and another opening at Fall River, Mass., of Columbia's "Snafu," brought to the fore two minutely planned and efficiently executed exploitation campaigns in these two small cities which should very easily have many a big city competitor looking to his laurels.

Ed Johnson, manager of the Washington in Bay City, had the town literally covered with "Snafu"—the picture title of course, not the army version—long before the opening day arrived. Virtually every store in town cooperated by devoting at least one window to the opening, one going so far as to congratulate Johnson on playing the film. All in all, there were sixteen windows employed in shops and one display in the city's hotel. Among those cooperating were the Ee and Be Dress Shop, which led the aggregation with three full windows, J. C. Penny, Knepp Store, Tabors, Washington Cafe, Oppenheims, Center Cafe, Secers, May Store, Cooks, and the following restaurants: McIntyres, McDonalds, Republic, L & M Imperial, and Kresage. The hotel display was set in the Winona Hotel.

Johnson worked two versions of the street bally idea, either one of which would have been worthy of note: together they were more than slightly terrific. The first consisted of placing 25 giant squash, each in itself large enough to cause comment by any passerby, in strategic points throughout the city. In the squash, placed at a rakish angle, were signs heralding the advent of the film at the Washington. According to reports it was one of the biggest eye-catchers the city has ever seen.

Long Line Follows Girls

The other street attraction was more mobile and created even more attention. Five of Bay City's most attractive young ladies were selected, each given a card that was printed on both sides. When they stood in the proper order, one side of their cards read "Snafu" and the other read "world premiere starting Washington theatre, Sunday." Johnson reports that the girls, who paraded through the city's streets, had a long line following them just to read the signs.

Opening night at the theatre was strictly a la Hollywood. Kleig lights, infrequent visitors to Bay City, announced that the town was having a premiere and the citizenry turned out en masse to watch the festivities. Forty-by-sixty blowups decorated the front, and a flasher overhead sign told all in sight that this was the world premiere of the picture. Johnson had kept his patrons well informed of the opening by announcing it in advance on his marquee, and for the opening night had a specially built front set in place. Flags decorated the theatre front and street, and one-sheets were well displayed throughout the lobby.

By refusing to admit that small cities won't go for splash campaigns, Johnson has proved once again that showmanship and hard work will help sell the picture in any sort of situation.

For the other "Snafu" opening, Ray Allard, manager of the Center Theatre, Fall River, Mass., decorated the front of his house with a 30x40 in color, representing five theatre doors, each carrying a different letter of the title. The front was prepared almost a week in advance of the opening and placed on the sidewalk in front of the house. In addition, he arranged to have two-foot high cut-out letters spelling the title of the film placed on top of the marquee, thus gathering more attention for his attraction.

Windows were plentiful for the opening, with the vote for the most attractive going to Adaskins Department Store, which displayed a complete living room, and the admonition "if your living room is all snafu, shop at Adaskins." Other shops which contributed full windows to the opening, each with complete theatre and playdate credits, were: Victory Sweater Shop, Terminal Bakery, Arthur's Radio Shop, Wilbur's Dress Shop, Sport's Center, and Talbot's Dress Shop.

For a radio contest, Allard picked one of the most popular shows heard in the city, "Name the Band," and tied in with WSAR. Passes were given to winners and the idea was to name the song and band after a previously announced selection was switched to another song and orchestra during the playing.

An interview with George Abbott and the children who had appeared in the original Broadway cast of "Snafu" was set in the Herald-News, and plentiful credit went to the theatre and playdate.

'Too Young to Know' Title Tied in With Dimes Drive

Tie-ups with a picture title and a local drive are not too uncommon but Richard Brill, Warner Bros. field representative set a new and admirable high in his use of the catchline "You may be 'Too Young to Know' but you are never too young to care" to plug the film and the local drive to aid the Infantile Paralysis Fund through the March of Dimes.

The slogan was used in newspaper ads, lobby displays and otherwise. Campaign also included a newspaper contest in which winners were guests of the theatre.

Special Feature Handling for Warner Short, 'Hitler Lives?'

Special feature handling will be given Warner Bros., short subject "Hitler Lives?" as the result of the unusual reception given the film by critics, columnists, radio commentators and audiences that have seen it to date. The subject is based on an original idea of Jack L. Warner, executive producer.

STUNNING. This enormous head of Bing Crosby matched a head of similar size of Ingrid Bergman, both of which were attached to the false front on each side of the entrance of the RKO Orpheum Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, to publicize the theatre's showing of RKO's "The Bells of St. Mary's." Although the front stressed star values prominently, the stills used, which may be seen in this reproduction, also contributed to the sales story.

Showmanship Drive Launched by Tri-States Theatres in Midwest

Theatre managers of Tri-States Theatres Corp. of Des Moines, which operates theatres in Iowa, Nebraska and Illinois, are competing for $550 in cash prizes in the circuit's first peacetime showmanship drive, which has just been launched, according to A. H. Blank, president of the company.

Designated as the G. Ralph Branton Showmanship Drive in honor of the circuit's executive operating head, the campaign also offers free trips to Hollywood for the winning district managers. The circuit is divided into three teams under District Managers H. D. Grove of Davenport, A. G. Stolte of Des Moines and Bill Miskell of Omaha. Myron Blank is drive captain.

Matlack's New Angle On Record-Breaking 'Spellbound' Business Cracks Newspaper

That exhibitors and their ubiquitous press agents have been frantically searching for new ideas with which to beguile newspaper editors into publishing the facts about record-breaking engagements in their various theatres is so well established as to be almost a by-word in the industry.

But Jack Matlack came up with a new twist recently when he photographed the 73,563rd person to enter the J. J. Parker Theatre in Portland, Oregon, during the showing there of David O. Selznick's "Spellbound" and by supplying sufficient biographical material about the patron was able to obtain nice breaks in the Portland newspapers, thus presenting the "bandwagon" theory of publicity and advertising in connection with the film.

Matlack arranged for a photographer to be present in the theatre lobby to catch the first person to buy the first ticket during he first minute of the second week of "Spellbound" and had her greeted by Mrs. J. J. Parker, president of Parker Theatres. The reproduction, shown here, broke the important Portland Oregonian with a two-column cut with accompanying text which stated that the film had broken every record hung up by any motion picture since the showing of "Min and Bill" in 1932.

73,563rd PATRON. Mrs. J. J. Parker greets her as first patron of 2nd week showing of UA's "Spellbound."

Jolley's Idea Gets 'Salome' Co-op Ads

By using a banner headline, "The Most Beautiful Girl in the World" across the top of a cooperative page in the Times-Gazette of Oshawa, Ontario, Manager Mel Jolley of the Marks Theatre inaugurated a unique and effective advertising and exploitation campaign for Universal's "Salome, Where She Danced," and succeeded in doing outstanding business for the film as a result of his efforts.

"The Most Beautiful Girl in the World" idea originated in Jolley's fertile thinking apparatus and was accepted with enthusiasm by the newspaper's advertising manager who, in order to win the merchants' cooperation, had only to suggest that they use the word "beautiful" to tie their ads in with the theatre's splash on the page. The page was an enormous success, giving considerable free space to the theatre, film and playdate and additional space to announce six coming attractions.

Jolley also printed several hundred Canadian postal cards and addressed them directly to the homes of patrons on his mailing list, adding a bit of personal touch to his campaign, aided in no little degree by the information transmitted to his patrons that Miss de Carlo, starred in the film, was a native of Canada and was selected from among 20,000 girls to star in the film.

A three-sheet lobby display with an artist's drawing of Yvonne de Carlo was loaned to Jolley by Ben Cronk, Canadian publicity chief, and was given the most prominent spot in the lobby in advance of the playdate. A sound truck, suitably bannered, toured the city on the opening day to round out the campaign.

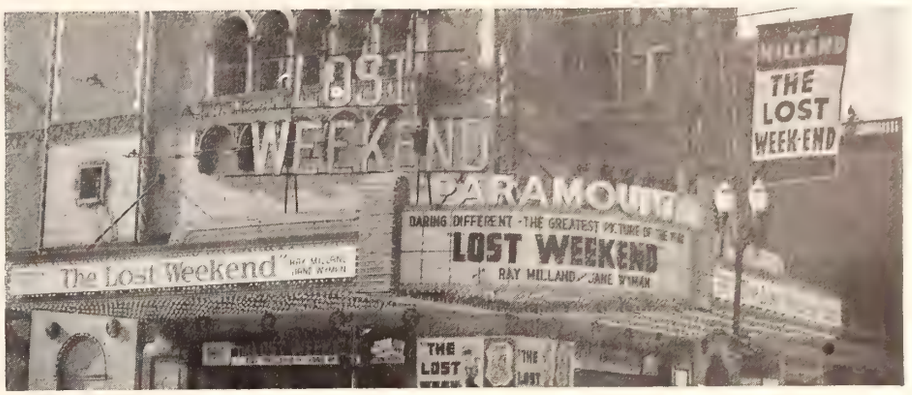
Call From Hollywood Feature of New Haven 'Expendable' Selling

Feature of the exploitation campaign on MGM's "They Were Expendable" at Loew's Poli Theatre, New Haven, was a long-distance telephone call from Robert Montgomery in Hollywood to a local resident who was a member of Commander John F. Bulkeley's famous PT Squadron. The stunt was staged by Morris Rosenthal of the theatre and Floyd Fitzsimmons, MGM exploiteer.

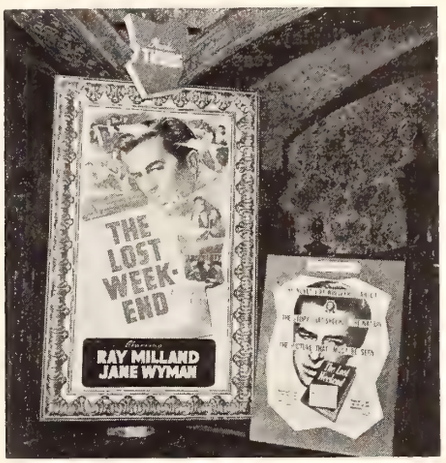
The crew member, Chief Torpedoman Charles De Maio, was tendered a testimonial dinner by the New Haven Advertising Club and the local American Legion Post. During the dinner the call was put through and was brought to the dinner guests by a p.a. system. The guest of honor was presented with a watch by Montgomery who was represented by Harry Shaw, Loew-Poli district manager.

Radio Plug, Cooperative Ad Pre-Sell 'Harvey Girls' for Cohen

An important advance plug for the showing of MGM's "The Harvey Girls" was arranged by Manager Lou Cohen, Loew's Poli-Hartford Theatre, when the book reviewer of the Sage Allen Department store went on the air locally and devoted her entire 15-minute radio program to the picture, with plenty of theatre and playdate plugs thrown in.



Another promotional plug arranged for the film by Cohen was cooperative advertising set by the G. Fox & Company department store, Connecticut's largest, in connection with the music album, newly issued as a result of the film's expected popularity.



'San Antonio' Tied in With Hutchinson City Celebration

Installation of a hitching post in front of the Fox Theatre, Hutchinson, Kansas, was tied-in by Manager Jay Wooten with the city's annual three-day "Pow Wow" celebration involving cowboys and cowgirls, giving the theatre's showing of Warners' "San Antonio" generous publicity mention in connection with the celebration.

An offer of free admission to horsemen during the run of the film was mentioned several times in newspaper stories and several of the many horsemen in the Hutchinson vicinity took advantage of the offer. Their horses hitched to the post added a colorful touch to the theatre front.

'Lost Weekend' All Over the Theatre

There was little danger of patrons of the Paramount Theatre, Omaha, asking the cashier what the next attraction would be or what it was when it did arrive, for the title of the film was spread far and wide throughout the length and breadth of the house. Just a few examples are shown above. In the top photo, the title is apparent in nine different places on the Paramount's front. Center photo, left, shows a lobby display frame and a smaller display. Center photo, right, shows the large display over the stairway leading to the mezzanine and balcony, while in the bottom photo the announcement of the coming attraction, made possible by placing cut-out letters along the footlights, could be seen by all patrons in the auditorium. Jim Castle, Paramount exploiteer, assisted the Paramount management in putting over the excellent campaign.

'Spellbound' Named 5 Times!

By making good use of the national promotions set up by David O. Selznick's New York, representatives, Manager Lou Cohen's assistant, Sam Horwitz, Loew Poli-Hartford Theatre, was able to obtain a three-column cooperative ad from the Sage-Allen department store on the Spellbound Dress in which the name of his feature attraction "Spellbound" was mentioned five times!

Turner Displays Help Sell 'Dolly Sisters'

A varied exploitation campaign utilizing the many photogenic ads accompanying 20th Century-Fox's "The Dolly Sisters," was staged by Manager Arthur Turner for the film's showing at the Parsons Theatre, Parsons, Kansas.

The house itself shouldered a good part of the publicity, which did a great deal in attracting patronage. A lobby display consisting of colored cut-outs of the stars, title and a row of stills on each side of the board, was moved in front of the box-office concurrent with the run of the picture.

Employing two special 8x10s and six special 11x14 stills, Turner designed an appealing 40x60 display utilizing the title, stars and catchlines. Daring pin-up shots of Betty Grable and June Haver did much to give the poster 'punch.' The display was spotted in the local bus station and hotel lobby ten days in advance of the playdate. Proof of its attractiveness was embodied in the announcement that the display would be forwarded to other theatres throughout the circuit to aid in exploiting the picture.

The advertising build-up in the newspaper began three days prior to the opening, and other small cuts were used in a nearby college publication and a weekly magazine. Twenty-five Victor Cornelius display ads were posted in prominent locations around the city.

The theatre's advertising truck heralded the film with a panel on each side of its carrier.

Serialization of 'Lost Weekend' In London Paper Helps Box-Office

The Paramount-promoted serialization in the London Daily Express of "The Lost Weekend," has added impetus to the film's general box-office results. With newsprint still rationed, the serial based on the Charles Jackson novel is being run in 2000-word installments and read by a circulation of more than three million.

The newspaper purchased the serial rights for the book from the author's London publisher, and the overall transaction was accomplished through the enterprise of T. C. Reddin, director of theatres and publicity for Paramount in England.

Rose Gets 4 Col. 'Tracy' Art

The popularity of the Dick Tracy cartoon strip and the value in which it is held by newspaper editors is exemplified by the 4-column art and caption which Harry A. Rose was able to obtain in the Sunday Herald, Bridgeport, Conn., where the Majestic Theatre was playing the RKO Radio version of "Dick Tracy" as a co-feature.

Cosmetics Tieup With Westmore Set on Three Warner Films

Tieups, with the benefit of extensive national exploitation, have been completed by Warner Bros., with the distributors of House of Westmore cosmetics on three films.

Barbara Stanwyck in "My Reputation" will be featured in ads appearing in the March issues of Photoplay, Screen Guide, Charm, Glamour, Junior Bazaar and Motion Picture. Andrea King in "Shadow of a Woman" will be contained in ads carried by Good Housekeeping and Cosmopolitan for March. Joan Leslie in "Cinderella Jones" will be featured in special newspaper ads scheduled for several key-city dailies prior to the film's local playdate.

David Susskind Joins Warners Field Public Relations Staff

David H. Susskind, recently discharged from the Navy with the rank of lieutenant, has been engaged by Mort Blumentock as a member of the Warner field public relations staff under Bill Brumberg. Susskind, who was engaged in public relations and promotional work before the war, is presently in Washington with Brumberg, working on "Hitler Lives?"

FLASH FRONT. Here's how the Rialto Theatre, Denver, designed a special front to sell PRC's double horror bill, "White Pongo" and "The Missing Corpse," with understandable emphasis on "White Pongo." The impressive front carried jungle foliage with huge cut-outs of apes to point up the film's eerie motif.

BOX-OFFICE SLANTS

most theatregoers for the story of a returned soldier is timely and this one carries a message; but it loses too much in its method of presentation, so that the events that occur lack sincerity and conviction. One finds it difficult, for example, to accept the premise that in lush times several hoodlums will accept, at face value, the help of a patron saint, and then just as quickly turn around and rob the poor in his name. William Powell carries the entire load of the picture on his very capable shoulders, and as usual, his performance is of exceptional merit. Esther Williams is an extremely attractive young lady, but she has much to learn in histrionics to make her handle her dramatic assignments with more ability. James Gleason is swell as the crook turned honest because of faith and Angela Lansbury is effective as the other woman. Relegated to lesser roles are such capable performers as Lewis Stone, "Rags" Ragland and Frank McHugh. Norman Taurog has given the picture good direction and Cliff Reid top production values.

Riverboat Rhythm

RKO Radio Comedy 65 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Leon Errol fans will like it and the musically inclined will be entertained by Frankie Carle's piano antics. Others will find it just mildly amusing. The more sophisticated will be bored.

BOX OFFICE SLANTS: Where Leon Errol pictures have done all right this will be suitable. Obviously designed for neighborhood duallers.

Cast: Leon Errol, Glenn Vernon, Walter Catlett, Marc Cramer, Jonathan Hale, Joan Newton, Dorothy Vaughan, Carter and Moreland, and Frankie Carle and his Orchestra. Credits: Produced by Nat Holt. Directed by Leslie Goodwins. Screenplay by Charles Roberts. Photography, Robert de Grasse.

Plot: Leon Errol, captain of a showboat, becomes embroiled in a mistaken identity fiasco, and all sorts of slapstick complications develop before the situation clears up. There is a mild romance between Glenn Vernon and Joan Newton that works in between the plot's development.

Comment: This a modestly budgeted production and looks it, and the direction is just about as good as it could be with the apparently laboriously contrived script. Errol goes through the same antics that have made him a favorite with some, but have become too familiar with most. The 65 minutes of screen time are padded with extraneous matter and the whole thing could just as well been made as a short, and probably with considerable improvement. It is suitable, however, for double bill situations as a supporting feature in mid-week programs.

'Favorite Warner Star' Radio Program Gives Gratis Photos

A "Who Is Your Favorite Warner Star?" campaign has been inaugurated by Jim Barnes, manager of the Warner Theatre, Memphis Tenn., on his daily radio program.

Commentator asks listeners to write in to the theatre naming their favorite stars, and in turn they receive an 8x10 photograph of the actor or actress, gratis.

Women Spur 'Rhapsody' Sales

Tom Gorman, Warner Bros. field representative in the territory embracing Raleigh, N. C., arranged for the Junior Women's Club of that city to handle the advance sale of tickets for "Rhapsody in Blue" at the Ambassador Theatre, with the girls doing such an outstanding job that the theatre had a line waiting all day.

The value of word-of-mouth advertising was demonstrated last week when constant box office lines were maintained for both "Spellbound" and "Leave Her to Heaven." With no newspapers for four weeks due to the newspaper strike, the public is dependent upon radio and telephone for news of theatre attractions. Martin Works—As Usual—On Anniversary

One of the industry's pioneer exhibitors celebrated his 34th anniversary in the film business by working as usual when Roy E. Martin, president of Martin Theatres, put in a full day of work at his Columbus, Ga., office on February 2. Working as usual is Martin's stock in trade, and his many friends in the Southland were not surprised that he chose to mark the event in such manner. The head of the circuit, which now has more than 100 houses in Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee and Florida, declares he has never known anything but hard work.

Born on a farm in Harris County, Ga., Martin led the life of the average farm boy until the death of his father early forced him to take on responsibilities that were unusually severe for a boy. However, he soon showed the determination that later brought him a theatre empire when he moved to Montgomery, Ala., where he started in the furniture business. Martin became attracted by the "nickelodeons" as a means of making money and was able to acquire one of those early "store" theatres, with the admission five cents.

After a great deal of sacrifice, Martin and his wife built a theatre called the Pastime, and then had to leave it stand idle for a long period because they didn't have the cash to buy equipment.

"The day we finally opened the Pastime was one of the proudest in our lives," the veteran showman said.

Mrs. Martin died in 1928, leaving two sons, R. E., Jr. and E. D. Martin, who are associated with their father in the theatre circuit.

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

The Golden Hunch (Excellent)

MGM (K774a) Passing Parade 10 mins.

John Nesbitt presents six moments in history when scientists made their great discoveries on hunches, brought about by thinking along lines of personal tragedies and experiences. The subject tells how the X-ray was discovered by accident; how shatterproof glass was invented by the scientist whose wife was disfigured by flying glass; how celluloid was invented by a man searching for a replacement for ivory in the manufacture of billiard balls; how a conscience-stricken doctor found the cause of child-bed fever; how Dr. George Washington Carver discovered the many industrial uses to which the lowly peanut can be put and how a chemist experimented on his dying child with what is now known as sulfanilamide as his only hope of saving the child, thus releasing its priceless benefits to humanity. An excellent, interesting short for any type of program.

MGM 10 mins.

The Flight of the Bumble Bee, Donkey Serenade and Tales From the Vienna Woods are three familiar pieces of music depicted by MGM in this miniature musical through the voices of Carlos Ramirez and Lucille Norman and produced with opulence usually associated with super-special deluxe feature productions. A combination of illusory photography and symphony orchestrations are combined to give every possible aid to the singers as they go through their paces. The music is excellent, the singing tops and the acting of the two principals far surpasses anything expected in a short. This "Masterpiece" was directed by Merrill Pye, and written and produced by Sam Baerwitz. Excellent for any program.

RKO (64,303) Sportscope 8 Mins.

Bowling, the popular pastime for millions of sports enthusiasts, is the theme for this latest release. Eye-popping trick shots are performed by such ace-keglers as Mary Jane O'Donnell, Audrey Gersch, Nelson Burton and Buddy Bomar, who show just how the game should be played. For the millions of ten-pin devotees, this reel will be of great interest, while others will find the display of accuracy and skill thoroughly entertaining.

Flicker Flashbacks (Amusing)

RKO (64,203) 7 Mins.

Using the same amusing format set by previous Flicker Flashbacks, this issue sweeps the cobwebs from a Biograph melodrama made back in 1908. It has to do with a camera-inventor's murder; the unjust accusation of a female by the villain; the hero turning states evidence and the real murderer, the villain, caught. This is followed by another drama, starring Owen Moore, back in 1909 in which the accelerated moving figures, displaying every hammy emotion known to man, prove that love will triumph over all. Good for plenty of laughs.

RKO (64,304) Sportscope 8 Mins.

Narrator Clem McCarthy takes audiences behind the scenes of the sport of kings to show what makes the mighty midgets of the turf, the highly paid jockeys, tick. Popular Eddie Arcaro, star rider of the Greentree Stable and one of the most outstanding jockeys on the track today, is the leading character in this reel, depicting the coordination of jockey and trainer, the careful study of the horse and its whims, and what is required to boot home a Kentucky Derby winner. Providing an exciting climax for this issue, Arcaro is shown, amid flashes of enthusiastic two-dollar bettors, riding his mount successfully to a photo finish. Racing fans and horse lovers will go for this.

Man's Pest Friend (Good)

Para. (D5-1) Little Lulu 8 mins.

Little Lulu and her dog, Pal, run into all sorts of amusing complications in their efforts to escape from the dog-catcher. Each time he ensnares Pal, Lulu outwits him until he becomes madly frustrated. Every gag in the books is employed, until the dog-catcher finally gives up and gets caught himself.

CLOSEUPS ON PICTURES IN WORK

RKO Radio, Monogram, Paramount, 20th-Fox, Universal Lead In Production Activity; Monogram Making Several Series Films; Republic Experimenting with Color Process

RKO RADIO Up to Last Year's High Production Performance; Six Pictures Before the Cameras.—With "The Dark Mirror," probably to be released through RKO, this studio has one of the best shooting records in Hollywood. "Mirror" joins "Sister Kenny," "Crack Up," "Desirable Woman," "Double Trouble" and "A Likely Story," all rolling at this time. This time last year RKO had nine films either before the cameras or in final phases of editing; it has an equal number this year.

It is interesting to note that just a year ago, the studio was finishing "Spanish Main," and a week from today plans call for its sequel, "Sinbad the Sailor." Morgan Padelford will serve as associate Technicolor director on this ambitious undertaking, evidently justified by the big grosses rolled up on "Spanish Main." Veteran character actor George Tobias plays the role of Douglas Fairbanks' constant companion. George Barnes is in charge of photography. Maureen O'Hara and Walter Slezak also appear as does ex-wrestler Mike Mazurki.

RKO picked up its option on James Warren, whom they are grooming as a new Western star. He recently appeared in "Badman's Territory."

Robert Cummings is set to star in "The Biggest Thief in Paris," to be produced in the fall by Val Lewton.

COLUMBIA Production Program at Low Ebb; Threat of Labor Trouble Probable Cause.—"The Walls Came Tumbling Down" was scheduled to be finished shooting this weekend, and final scenes for "The Story of Jolson" are being shot. "Hop Harrigan," serial, is closing up shop, too. This setup is weak as compared to last year's shooting at a comparable date, when Columbia had six films either rolling or getting a final going-over. Like other studios in Hollywood, Columbia's production is being affected by the current labor situation. Columbia reflects a general downward trend in production in the film capital.

"One Life Too Many" is one of the pictures caught in the current production snarl; its starting date is tentative. With luck, the picture will roll this week. Michael Duane, recently discharged from service, is set to resume his acting career by playing the male lead in this picture. John Sturges, ex-vet, directs.

Following the angle currently employed by other studios in appealing to the huge bloc of school-age audiences, Columbia is planning a teen-age musical called "Betty Coed."

REPUBLIC Threatens to Close Its Studio Entirely; President Yates Predicts Other Studios Will Also Close.—The big news from Republic was the threat by Herbert J. Yates, president, to close down the studio until labor finds accord within its ranks.

Echoing Yates' sentiments was the dismal production schedule, only film shooting is "The Invisible Informer." Last year at this time, four pictures were under way.

Brighter facts at Republic are the finishing of the latest Roy Rogers specials, "Rainbow Over Texas"; a tentative starting date of February 14 for "My Pal, Trigger," next Rogers release; and ambitious plans for extending the studio's "A" picture production. Plans call for five big films, to cost between $750,000 and a million dollars, to be shot in the next three months. First of these is to be "Earl Carroll's Sketchbook," which may roll late this month.

Republic is experimenting with a color process of its own; for the time being, Technicolor productions are not being made.

The studio announced a new star for the "Red Ryder" series; Allan Lane takes the place of Bill Elliott, who will do dramatic roles in straight films. Martha Wentworth plays "The Duchess" in the series, the same role she handles over the air, and Bobby Blake plays "Little Beaver," the Indian boy.

MONOGRAM Maintains Production Tempo; Bowery Boys Film Starts.—This studio continues to come along consistently, delivering pictures with regularity. If ever a studio believed in series, Monogram is the one. The results seem to justify this practice because series are being increased rather than decreased. Exemplary is "In High Gear," second of the Bowery Boys line-up, which is just starting before the cameras. The series stars Leo Gorcey with Huntz Hall, Bobby Jordan and Billy Benedict. Known last year as "The East Side Kids," under the production of Sam Katzman, the boys received a name change the same time they acquired a new producer, Jan Grippo.

Now being edited is the latest Johnny Mack Brown, "Code of the Drifter," one of eight scheduled. The second of the new "Shadow" series is completed and being given a final check-up. Titled "The Shadow's Shadow," it features June Clyde, Robert Shayne and Jean Carlin in the cast. "West of the Alamo" is all done; this Jimmy Wakely Western is indicative of another of the studio's standard series.

Carry-over from last year are the Charles Chan regulars and the "Cisco Kid" series. Gilbert Roland, just out of service, succeeds Duncan Renaldo in "The Cisco Kid" efforts. Another series is "The Teen-Age" group, with one already completed.

King Bros., claim they will spend a million dollars on the next Belita special, "The Hunted." Belita is supposed to return to this country from England shortly. Her "Suspense" is still awaiting a national release date.

PRC Halts All Production; Plans Are Bright for the Future.—There is nothing at all shooting here at this time. However, the Di-Cicco picture, "Avalanche," is scheduled to start

Billy Rose's Career Subject For Paramount Color Special

The slightly fabulous Billy Rose is going to be celebrated in celluloid, according to an announcement this week by Henry Ginsberg, Paramount production head. Paramount owns the film rights to the story of Rose's life, and the plan is to do the picture in Technicolor with all the stops of the budget organ pulled out. No announcement was made as to the actor who will depict Rose on the screen.

The film production is expected to contain glimpses of Billy's life from the time he was national shorthand champion on through such familiar activities of the theatrical entrepreneur as his "Jumbo" show at New York's old Hippodrome, the Texas Centennial, his Aquacade at the World's Fair, the famous Diamond Horseshoe night club, and the musical novelty, "Carmen Jones."

Edmund Grainger Returning to Republic As a Producer

Major Edmund Grainger, who has just been honorably discharged from the United States Army, will return to Republic Studios in about a month to fulfill his contract with the company.

While in the east Grainger took options on two stories, "Come One, Come All," by Francis J. Kane, and "King Copper" by Peter Morrison. Negotiations are also in progress for an outstanding best seller of the current season.

Paiva Cast in 'Likely Story'

After 10 consecutive years as the villain in the Los Angeles production of "The Drunkard," Nestor Paiva will play an underworld character in RKO Radio's "A Likely Story" in which Bill Williams and Barbara Hale are starred.

Signing of Rachmil Assures Steady Output of Hopalongs

William Boyd, so long identified with the Hopalong Cassidy series as made by Harry Sherman, will continue along the same lines in his new Hopalongs, it was disclosed this week, through the signing of Lewis J. Rachmil as producer. Rachmil was associated with Sherman and Boyd for five years in the making of the earlier numbers of the series and will now turn out the Cassidys at the rate of six a year.

The first of the new Boyd films is scheduled to get under way May 1 at the General Service Studios. As before, the films will be released through United Artists.

Cavalcade of Radio

Jerrold Brandt, just out of the Navy, will have the help of the nation's radio editors in selecting a group of 20 air stars to appear in his first independent production, "Magic in the Air." The story covers radio from its crystal set days to the present, and the former RKO producer says he will abide by the decision of the radio writers after a country-wide canvass.

'Sigma Chi' Musical in Work

Carl Gass has moved on the lot at Monogram to prepare the screenplay for "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," college musical to be produced by Lindsley Parsons. Shooting will start in April.

Mrs. Showman Goes Studio Strolling

Dear Mr. Exhibitor's Wife:

Today we're invited to Republic to see Jane Withers do a scene in "Lonely Hearts Club," her latest picture for the studio.

From what I hear, she really gets herself into quite a marriage mess in this picture, for she not only gets married to Jimmy Lydon, her co-star, but she ALMOST marries the villain in the film. All this comes about when, as a small-town girl in a big city, she gets mixed up with a man who makes it his hobby to marry wealthy women whom he meets through a matrimonial bureau and whom Jane meets through her job as secretary of the Lonely Hearts Club.

As soon as we enter the set we know we've arrived at the right moment, for we find them rehearsing the wedding scene. Set is the inside of the church, and all the guests (including us) are there, all ready for the ceremony to begin.

Jane, in her lovely white satin period model wedding gown and veil, is standing beside the groom, Charles Quigley (the villain), with Lydon acting as best man. The camera is up close, so that it can catch the action and dialog as the players go through their lines. Director George Blair is standing next to the cameraman checking last-minute details.

When Blair gives his okay, a buzzer sounds, at which time everybody quiets down so that the scene can be filmed. It starts with the priest reading the service. This is interrupted by a fire alarm siren which halts everything. At this point the sheriff rushes in with two women who immediately point Quigley out as their husband. Pandemonium reins, with Lydon taking a sock at Quigley as he tries to get to the door, the sheriff and the women all talking at the same time explaining the reason for the siren and Jane finally realizing that it is Lydon she loves and giving orders to continue the wedding with him as the groom.

It is a difficult and confusing scene and one that needs perfect timing, so that Director Blair has it repeated several times before he okays the "take" by yelling "print it" so quickly that it brings a laugh from everyone present.

Now we get our chance to meet Jane. She's free for the moment and we can visit with her until duty calls. In talking about what fun it is to watch the shooting of a picture, she tells us that she usually visits friends on other sets when she isn't working. Sort of a "a busman's holiday."

Just before she's called back on the set, we manage to get her autograph and Lydon's, whom we also meet.

Until next week.

CLOSEUPS ON PICTURES IN WORK

this month. The future holds important tidings for PRC, however, much of which is contingent upon present New York conferences between Reeves Espy, president of PRC Productions and Studios, Robert Benjamin, president of the J. Arthur Rank organization, and Robert Purcell, board chairman of Pathe. Espy is scheduled to produce ten films of "A" caliber for Eagle-Lion Films.

PARAMOUNT Adheres to Schedule on Shooting and Editing; Buys Broadway Stage Hit, "State of Union."—Last year at this period, this studio had seven films shooting or edited; this year, the record is substantially the same. Still rolling are "The Perfect Marriage" and "California," to which added scenes have necessitated more shooting. "The Searching Wind" is being edited. "O.S.S.," one of the entries in the Hollywood sweepstakes on government agencies, just started, with Geraldine Fitzgerald and Alan Ladd. "And Suddenly It's Spring," produced by Claude Binyon and directed by Mitchell Leisen, should roll this month. Paulette Goddard and Fred MacMurray co-star.

Marjorie Reynolds' p.a. tour of the east and mid-west was approved by the studio; her latest is "Monsier Beaucaire," just getting the final editing brushup.

Gloria Saunders gets the femme lead in "Danger Street," Pine-Thomas production, scheduled to roll this week.

"State of the Union," Broadway stage hit was bought by the studio.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER Slightly Behind Last Year's Shooting Record; Spencer Tracy Returns to Screen.—This week in 1945 found MGM with nine films in shooting or final stages of production; this year the company's tempo is not quite so accelerated.

"Till the Clouds Roll By," starting its third week, augurs well for a tremendous box-office smash, with an all-star cast and based on the life of America's well-loved late composer, Jerome Kern. Other films now before the lensmen are "Fiesta," being filmed in Mexico; "You Were There," starring Taylor and Hepburn; and "The Showoff," starring Red Skelton. "Fiesta," which has been rolling since early December, ought to finish any day now. Pictures being edited and scored, having just completed shooting sequences, are "Faithful in My Fashion," "But Not Goodbye," and the long-in-production special, "The Yearling."

Spencer Tracy comes back from an ill-fated Broadway stage run to do "The Beginning of the End," Metro's contestant in the atom theme race. Sam Marx will produce and Norman Taurog direct.

Elia Kazan, veteran director, was signed to handle "Sea of Grass," a Pandro Berman production to start soon.

"Stormy Waters," French film starring Jean Gabin and Michele Morgan, was bought by MGM, and will be released with English dialog. The film was made in 1941.

WARNER BROS. Starting Film on Marilyn Miller's Life; Shooting Schedule Lags.—"The Silver Lining," Joan Leslie starrer about Marilyn Miller's life, is scheduled to start this week. Otherwise, things are slow at the Burbank film factory. "Humoresque," Joan Crawford-John Garfield picture, is winding up; "Two Guys from Milwauke" is receiving final check; "The Sentence," in its fifth week, finds production about one-third through; and "Escape Me Never" is being edited, following cessation of shooting.

"Devotion," one of the multi-million dollar backlog pictures the studio has held in abeyance, is to be released shortly.

Suzi Crandall, ex-Conover model, was signed to a long-term acting contract.

Director Fritz Lang is testing for a leading lady to play opposite Gary Cooper in "Cloak and Dagger."

TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX Heads and Heels Over Last Year's Production Record; Continues to Lead Hollywood in Current Camera Activity.—In the corresponding week last year, this studio had six films either being produced or in the editing phase; at the present time, there are seven films before the cameras alone, with others being prepared for final release.

"Three Little Girls in Blue" is the oldest picture in production, having started on November 7. The film, produced by Mack Gordon, is a Technicolor special featuring Vivian Blaine, George Montgomery and June Haver. Another older still rolling is Betty Grable's "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim," which started November 19. "Cluny Brown," the Charles Boyer-Jennifer Jones starrer, completed its second month before the cameras; and the Sol Wurtzel production, "Rendezvous 24," finishes its first month of shooting this week. Winding up are "Anna and the King of Siam," Irene Dunne picture; "The Dark Corner" and "It Shouldn't Happen to a Dog."

Latest starter is "Margie," just getting into action on the lot under the production guidance of Walter Morosco.

UNIVERSAL Has Three Features, One Serial Rolling; Several Pictures Being Given Final Check.—This studio is producing "Shahrazad," now in its fifth week of shooting. The film features Yvonne De Carlo, Brian Donlevy and Eve Arden. "Love Takes a Holiday," Joan Davis-Jack Oakie-Mischa Auer starrer, moves into its fourth week. "Prelude to Murder," featuring Nigel Bruce and Basil Rathbone, recently started. "Lessons in Love," Fessier-Pagano production, is scheduled to roll this week. "Design for Death," murder-mystery, is now in the editing stage.

Universal's present record for films before the cameras compares favorably with last year's production, when seven pictures were in shooting or editing phases. In addition, "Lost City of the Jungle," a serial, is being made at Universal City.

The studio is one of the best performers on production at this point among all the lots, despite labor difficulties.

UNITED ARTISTS, With Large Roster of Units, Has Few Pictures in Production Now; Sylvia Sidney Playing in "Mr. Ace and the Queen."—"Angel on My Shoulder," Charles R. Rogers production; "The Strange Woman," Hunt Stromberg picture, and "Mr. Ace and the Queen," Benedict Bogeaus film, are the only pictures being photographed now. "The Sin of Harold Diddlebock," Harold Lloyd starrer produced by Preston Sturges, is being shaped up for imminent release. UA is behind its shooting at a comparable time last year, but has a number of big projects planned.

James Cagney plans to make "A Lion in the Streets" his next starrer. Sylvia Sidney will probably get feminine acting honors.

Sturges' California Pictures Corp. picked up the option of Frances Ramsden, who plays opposite Lloyd in "Diddlebock."

Sylvia Sidney is now acting in "Mr. Ace and the Queen," playing the part of a Congresswoman campaigning for the state governorship. Many believe this film will institute a trend toward that type of picturization. George Raft, as the political boss who opposes her election, co-stars.

SET VISITOR. Republic President Herbert J. Yates, Sr., chats with Constance Moore in the fetching costume she wears for a scene in "In Old Sacramento," in which she co-stars with William Elliott.

Harmon-Ising Announce Plans To Re-enter Cartoon Field

An added entry to the field of full-length cartoon production made its appearance this week when Hugh Harmon and Rudolph Ising announced they had again joined forces to reorganize Harmon-Ising Pictures, Inc., following a four-year interuption while both served in the armed forces. Edward J. Peskay, long an exhibitor and production executive, has been named president of the company, while Tom Fizdale, publicity expert, is the vice-president and general manager.

The reorganized firm plans immediate production of three full-length color films, the first of which will be "King Arthur and His Knights of the Round Table." The second feature will be "The Little Prince" by Antoine de Saint-Exupery. A budget of $3,000,000 has been earmarked for the three pictures.

4 Live Action-Animation Shorts Planned by Quimby for '45-46

MGM will produce at least four Technicolor short subjects combining live action and animation for the 1945-46 season, with one to star Margaret O'Brien, it was revealed last Friday by Fred Quimby, head of the short subjects department, before his departure for Hollywood. One of the shorts is in production and the others are in story preparation.

Details of the live action-animation system used so successfully for a sequence in "Anchors Away" are still secret, Quimby said, adding that three months of day and night work and the dropping of all other cartoon production were required to make the eight-minute sequence. Of the 58 shorts on the 1945-46 schedule, 32 have been delivered, he said.

Finston Forms Music Service For Independent Producers

Nathaniel Finston, one of the pioneers in the development of music for pictures, has announced the organization of a complete film-musical unit to service independent productions.

"The foremost and most versatile group of musicians, arrangers, scorers, composers and conductors in the world are today to be found in Hollywood," says Finston, who has headed Paramount's and MGM's music departments. "The independent producer may now obtain the best in music that has hitherto been possible only to a few studios engaged in mass production."

Over, and Over Again

There may be rhythm (which jive addicts tell us is terrifically important) but there is—to one in show business—also a monotonous repetition of the "master plan" in these various and sundry Allied units' resolutions regarding the proposed Theatres Activities setup.

Down in Washington—at a meeting attended by many Allied men who previously had accepted invitations to be present at the gathering at which the TAC was projected—the Allied high command put the inner circle injun sign (as is not unusual in the star-chamber techniques of that organization) on the Theatre Activities Committee plan. Whereupon, Allied men as a body reneged on the TAC meeting, including many who previously had signified in writing they would attend and at which the outlines were drawn for a national organization whose platform, purposes and set-up will be discussed out in the open—according to promises of those who making arrangements for the convention—at a national gathering in St. Louis next April.

Since that time this Allied unit and that one, with the tiresome regularity we complain about, has been following in the "master's" footsteps. Somebody gets up and says that there is nothing in the TAC plan which cannot be done better by Allied and then a motion comes up, and is passed, in which the whole august body declares itself devoutly in favor of a "free screen."

In the viewpoint of this corner nothing is more healthful to a good, democratic, business-like way of settling on the best course, than to have an outspoken opposition to every proposal. To be outspoken, of course, one must first determine what the proposal is before either approving or putting the veto on it. However, in Allied's case this mealy-mouthed business of piously talking about a "free screen" in one breath and caverlierly dismissing in the next a plan which they haven't taken the trouble to find out the least thing about seems a bit too thick for this observer.

Previously we have suggested—and we still think it's a swell idea—that theatremen owe it to themselves to find out what this TAC plan is all about. The men behind it are certainly of the stature, and the reputation on the basis of their long records in this industry, to command interest. Surely, this can't be a crackpot notion proceeding from the day-dreamings of tyros and theorists who are known for their accomplishments in fields of legalistic or political activities or organizational hocus-pocus rather than for their identification with the hard, down-to-earth work of running theatres, and running them successfully as an enterprise independent and apart from producer or distributor affiliations.

What we think is needed now is an intelligent consideration of the Theatre Activities Committee proposal. That can come only if large numbers of independent, working theatremen and theatre owners individually inform themselves about this TAC movement. It won't do to turn the whole program down—sight unseen—in the present Allied style. Let great numbers of the theatremen themselves become acquainted with the plan. Let them look it over critically and impartially and come to a decision as to whether or not they believe it good for the theatres of this country to get together in such an organization and on such a program as TAC proposes. Then let them act—in good American fashion—entirely in accordance with their own free, independent beliefs and wishes.

Worth Your While

The chairman of the industry committee for American Brotherhood Week—that would be Spyros Skouras—has been doing an excellent job of setting up the whole plan for theatre participation in this campaign which will run for the week February 16-24. Even without such an outstanding job of national organization for the week, the American Brotherhood Week movement would deserve the most spirited and whole-hearted effort on the part of all exhibitors.

The exhibitor—the theatreman—is in the peculiar position of carrying a responsibility that ranges far beyond the scope of that which falls upon the shoulders of other business men. His theatre is the focal point of community interest and attention. He enjoys great benefits thereby. But he also has these responsibilities, and one of them is to line up and go to work for just such idealistic—and wholly necessary—movements as is represented in the American Brotherhood drive sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Theatremen can be proud that their industry has so effectively focussed the attention of America on this movement (the public appeal of the Supreme Court Justices which appears in your newsreels is merely the culminating flourish to a fine job of public relations) and it behooves all theatremen to show the excellent trailer and give the greatest showmanship punch to the whole idea which will be in the national spotlight during the week February 16-24.

Sound Labor Policy a Must, Says Johnston

MPAA Chief Cites Close Tie Between Hollywood's Studios and the Theatres

By TOM KENNEDY

The most important single contribution to a good public relations job for the industry at this time is a labor relations program that will permanently end the chaotic situation currently existing in Hollywood, Eric Johnston told Showmen's Trade Review in New York last Friday (Feb. 8). Mr. Johnston in discussing the situation with this reporter prior to the MPAA president's departure for Washington following his New York meetings with film company executives, advertising men and the trade press, indicated that in his opinion the difficulties besetting the producers extends far beyond the walls of the Hollywood studios and is a matter of concern to the entire industry, not exclusively the producer-distributor members of the organization of which he is president.

Eric A. Johnston

"In my opinion," Mr. Johnston said, "enlightened and efficient labor relations under which the present studio difficulties will be resolved and productive working conditions established between labor and management is a prime essential to a sound public relations program for the industry." He indicated that not merely the costly disruption of studio schedules—which place an economic burden on all branches of the industry—but other considerations give the matter vital concern to all enterprises and individuals associated with the industry, and definitely can affect "the public relations of the motion picture as an industry" and as a public institution as represented by the theatres in cities, towns and communities throughout the U. S.

Mr. Johnston—citing the large number of crafts and guilds with which the studios have to deal—said that studio management faces tremendous problems in dealing with a highly complicated situation. "On the other hand," he added, "these unions have their own difficulties which have arisen over natural conflicts concerning jurisdiction." He admitted that the situation is a veritable "mess," and declared that "this is the fault of nobody in particular—unless you want to go 'way back into the beginning" of a highly complicated pattern which has resulted in an industry employing such a large number and variety of crafts and skills.

In view of the announced intention of two exhibitor organizations (Theatre Activities Committee and National Allied) to give high priority to discussions of a postwar public relations program for the industry, Johnston's remarks might indicate the existence of a hitherto unheralded relationship between his preoccupation with efforts for a long range solution to Hollywood's labor troubles and the emphasis put on public relations by exhibitor leaders.

Eric Johnston is not alone in stressing the complex nature of the present labor situation in the industry Those who have been closely associated with the current difficulties in Hollywood insist that a closeup understanding of the intricate pattern of the studio-labor setup is essential to a full appreciation of the involved situation with which the industry has had to come to grips since the outbreak of the picketing and strikes that started in March 1945.

Johnston, it is abundantly clear from his public pronouncements, has not swerved from his original position that he is interested in a "long range" program rather than an expedient out from the present difficulties. His attitude appears to be that the technic of the quick solution of immediate difficulties, instead of solving problems, has contributed to the further complication of a situation which, shortly after assuming his post as head of the MPAA, Johnston described as "the most complicated jurisdictional strike I have ever known."

Paramount to Protect Exhibitors From 16mm. Invasion—Reagan

Charles M. Reagan

Paramount Pictures has no intention, either at present or in the future, of jeopardizing its 35-mm. exhibitor accounts in the domestic market by expanding its 16-mm. program, it was stated unequivocally by Charles M. Reagan, vice-president in charge of distribution, during the recently completed regional sales meeting. In fact, Paramount has already curtailed its limited participation of the past, Mr. Reagan added.

Pointing out that Paramount was the pioneer in the 16-mm. field when it began its activities in 1935, Reagan stressed the fact that exhibition of the small guage film today is confined to Red Cross hospitals, "Shut-In" institutions, schools and Prisoner-of-War camps. As to the 16-mm. service provided for schools, Reagan pointed out that available films utilized in educational programs include only pictures of a definite historic nature.

As further protection to its regular 35-mm. accounts, the company recently withdrew all 16-mm. film from theatre-less towns.

Future plans in the 16-mm. domestic field, as far as Paramount is concerned, Reagan concluded, definitely include the intention of strict adherence to the company's present policies, and the restriction of showings solely to those outlets with revenue possibilities removed from and not in competition with the standard-size field.

SMPE to Educate All Industry Employes

Under the leadership of Frank Cahill, Director of Projection and Sound for Warner Brothers, the Atlantic Coast Section of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is undertaking a far-reaching program to acquaint all members of the industry with all phases of its activities.

At Wednesday night's meeting at the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, dubbing technique was explained by W. A. Pozner of MGM International Films Corp. Next month's meeting, to be held March 13th, will be addressed by Dr. Allen B. DuMont, President of DuMont Television, on the subject of the relationship between television and motion pictures.

All meetings will open to members and nonmembers of the Society alike, Col. Cahill, who is chairman of the Atlantic Coast Section, stresses.

Altec Western Executives Confer on Post-War Plans

Altec Service Corporation this week held a three-day conference of the Western Division in Seattle, at which district managers and supervisors from the Seattle and Los Angeles districts, together with home office executives, talked over the post-war program. In discussing the conference, G. L. Carrington, Altec president, said, "The Voice of the Theatre, Altec Lansing's new loudspeaker system, which has already received nationwide acceptance by exhibitors and patrons alike, was featured during the first day's session."

Dailey Joins Music Hall Staff

Major Jack F. Dailey, now on terminal leave after four years' service with the Army Air Forces, on March first, will join the staff of Radio City Music Hall as Administrative Assistant to G. S. Eyssell managing director.

Plan Limited German Film Production Soon

Germany's film industry will be permitted to function soon under the supervision of a well known Hollywood figure, who will be attached to the Army's Information Control Division and who will license, censor and otherwise control what is expected to be extremely limited production, it was announced by representatives of the State Department headed by John Lefebre last week at a meeting with trade press representatives in the Office of Fred Schwartz, Century Circuit executive who spent three months in Germany as head of the American policy making group on film matters.

Feature productions will be made in the undamaged Bavarian Filmkunst Studios on the outskirts of Munich which has four sound stages Lefebre said.

Three pictures from each of the four countries occupying Germany will be exchanged for showing in each zone under terms of an agreement recently made between the United States, Great Britain, Russia and France, Mr. Lefebre stated.

10,000 'Creed' Prints Shipped Through NSS

Shipment of 10,000 prints of "The American Creed," three-minute trailer with nine famous stars for the American Brotherhood Week, will be completed early next week by National Screen Service, Spyros P. Skouras, national chairman of the film industry committee announced this week. Prints are available through any local branch manager of all film companies or through NSS.

Exhibitor groups in numerous localities are urging organization members to participate by giving the film the widest possible coverage. Among those who are co-operating in the drive are P. J. Wood, secretary of the ITO of Ohio, who in a special bulletin urged his exhibitors to play the film. In Denver, F. H. Ricketson, Jr., state chairman, announced the entire territory has been canvassed by branch managers.

In Pittsburgh, invitations to a special screening were sent to the entire mailing list of the Conference to all Ministers, Priests and Rabbis in Allegheny County last Thursday, with a record turnout reported.

'No Audience, No Dirty Show', Class Suburb Proves Point

One of the citizens of Wilmette Village in the Chicago area said: "I still say when a dirty talker has no audience he'll stop talking." Last week the residents of this North Shore community made the theory effective by doing away with a "sex hygiene" film-lecture show called "Mom and Dad" (uniformed nurse at each performance). The exclusive suburb revolted when glaring ads announced the event, and various civil committees charged the local authorities with dereliction of duty, calling the show downright dirty and corrupting to their morals.

The authorities got busy. The result was that after five days the police swooped down and arrested a Charlie Zimmerman, alias Elliott Forbes, on charges of giving an indecent performance and selling obscene printed matter.

Screen Ad Sales at Top

Alexander Film Co. announced this week that sales in 1945 topped all previous years in the company's more than a quarter-century in the theatre screen advertising field. Sales signed exceed four and one-half million dollars, representing an increase of 33 per cent over the previous year.

U. S. Films Face Test

The film industry will soon enter a period when it will be faced with the toughest competition for world markets in history, according to David E. Rose, managing director for Paramount in Great Britain, who arrived in Hollywood Monday. Rose pointed out that almost all countries contemplate production and that this will raise the general level of films, both in quality and qauntity, so that audiences can pick and choose as never before. To make money the film will have to satisfy the world's box office customer.

Kentucky Bills Seek to Raise and Lower Taxes

Bills sponsored by the Kentucky Association of Theatre Owners have been introduced in the state's legislature calling for the repeal of the graduated theatre admission tax. Coincidentally, however, another measure, designed to increase the present tax, has been introduced in Kentucky's lower house.

Considerable doubt is expressed that a reduction of taxes can be realized since the legislators have department requests for $9 million in excess of potential revenue. Theatre tax receipts, accounting for 90 per cent of the admission tax, have grown annually since 1938-39 when collections totaled $520,158.

Mochrie and O'Shea in Variety Convention Posts

Robert Mochrie and Ted O'Shea have accepted posts on the general convention committee for the national convention of Variety Clubs of America to be held in May, it has been announced by R. J. O'Donnell, National Chief Barker.

O'Donnell also announced that Paul Short has been appointed executive co-chairman for Hollywood, where he will work with Dick Owen on the convention journal, and with Bud Saunders on transportation.

Arthritis Drive Pilots Listed

Jack Flynn, chairman of the amusement division for the drive for $2,500,000 to establish a new National Arthritis Research Foundation in Hot Springs, Ark., this week announced area chairmen to assist in the campaign. They included Tracy Barham, Salt Lake City, Si Fabian, New York; Harold Fitzgerald, Milwaukee; John Harris, Pittsburgh; Bob O'Donnell, Dallas; Henderson M. Richey, New York; Charles Skouras, Los Angeles.

PRC Key Men Meet in Fla.

'Zippie' Goldman with Embassy

Harry "Zippie" Goldman, former franchise holder for PRC in New England, has become a partner in Embassy Pictures Company of Boston, according to Joseph E. Levine, representing Embassy.

March Release for 'Trunk'

With March 30 set as the national release date for "Saratoga Trunk," Warner Bros. will have two new releases for next month. The other is "Cinderella Jones," dated for March 9.

Northwest Population Shift Produces Boom

Many motion picture theatre owners in the Portland, Ore., area, especially the small chain operators, are making an enthusiastic survey of the various new communities of Oregon and Washington. They find that a good deal of the big center population in order to escape high taxes has moved into the suburbs. Many of the returning G.I.'s are settling in these communities. Hence the many new theatres either contemplated or already under way, depending upon the availability of materials.

Among the new houses for 1946 is a $150,000 theatre, operated by Evergreen Theatres Corporation, to be built at Olympia, Wash.

John Danz, president of the Sterling Theatre chain, announces a new building will be erected at 39th Ave. South and Empire Way, Seattle. The building will include a 1,000-seat theatre and will cost an estimated $250,000. A second house will be built by the corporation at 33rd Avenue West and West McGraw Street, Seattle.

E. W. Johnson, who operates the Northwest Motor-In Theatre on Seattle-Tacoma Highway, announces that plans have been completed for construction of a new Aurora Motor-In Theatre at 135th Street and Aurora Ave., Seattle. It will accommodate 700 cars.

30-Day Teamster Truce Saves Mich. Theatres

Tie-up of 600 theaters in Detroit and Michigan was averted as 30 striking American Federation of Labor film truckers declared a truce with five companies in their fight for a 30 per cent pay increase after being off their ffiobs for two days last week.

Robert Lomasney, state labor mediator, said he was notified by Frank Fitzsimmons, business manager of the RFL Teamsters Local 299, of a 30-day suspension of the strike pending mediation.

Lomasney met with representatives of the five trucking firms involved and union negotiators. A plea by Earl Hudson, official of the United Detroit Theatre Corporation, was instrumental in bringing about the truce.

The five trucking firms haul all films in the state. Twenty neighborhood houses in Detroit were forced to close two days before. No film had been delivered to them.

The truckers are demanding a 30 per cent wage increase and other contract amendments.

New Cartoon Sound Track Is Devised for Universal Short

A new-type sound track which will double the size of that now in use, is being utilized for Walter Lantz's second Musical Miniature cartune entitled "Chopin's Musical Moments" for Universal release. A wider range of sound is claimed for the new track.

Lantz has signed Ted Saidenberg and Ed Rebner, duo-pianists, to record four Chopin compositions for the cartune.

It Can Be Done

Last December the Princess Theatre in St. Louis was destroyed by fire. This week owner H. E. Webster announced the theatre will be rebuilt as soon as weather conditions permit. But what about building materials, you ask? Simple for Mr. Webster. He purchased a large private near-by residence and this will be razed so that heavy timber and brick will be available in time.

Justices Stone, Frankfurter, Murphy Raise Voices for 'Brotherhood Week'

For the first time in the history of the country's highest tribunal three Supreme Court Justices this week temporarily doffed their robes to lend support to an outside activity—"American Brotherhood Week"—when Chief Justice Harlan F. Stone, and Justices Felix Frankfurter and Frank Murphy made public statements in Washington asking the nation to back the campaign for better racial understanding.

The personal appeal of the Justices, who were photographed and recorded by newsreels, came just before the start of the drive sponsored by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, which begins this Sunday. The Justices themselves represented the three chief religious groups—Protestants, Catholics and Jews.

Time of Confusion

In his statement Chief Justice Stone remarked: "These are times of shifting standards and moral confusion. That this is true is due, more than all else, to the fact that mankind, despite its long and painful struggle up from barbarism, is not yet ready to accept in its fullness the ultimate truth that there can be no civilized society, there can be no peace or happiness among men, without freedom of the spirit and the mind for all men—and may I say also, unless we preserve intact the capacity for righteous indignation at every form of cruelty and injustice, and the urge to give vigorous expression to it.

"Freedom of the mind and the spirit has its practical aspects in every-day life. It includes the right of every man to live and work in peace, to earn, to save, and to enjoy the fruits of his labor, so long as their enjoyment does no harm to his neighbor. It embraces the freedom of all men to seek the truth wherever it may lead, to think and speak freely, and to worship God according to the dictates of conscience."

Faith in Common Man

Justice Frankfurter said: "If one faith can be said to unite a whole nation surely the ideal that holds us together beyond any other is our belief in the moral worth of common man, whatever his race or religion. In this faith America was founded. This is the faith her poets and prophets have preached. To this faith unknown millions, generations after generation, have devoted their lives.

"The unfolding of our Republic is the story of the greatest racial admixture in history. Of the fifty-six signers of the Declaration of Independence eighteen were of non-English stock. Foreign-born citizens from almost every land fought in the War for Independence, helped to save the Union and are found on the honor rolls of the two World Wars. Full scope to the human spirit, whatever its racial or religious origin, is the distinctive hallmark of Americanism. This was the conviction expressed by President Roosevelt on the occasion of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Statue of Liberty.

"I like to think of the men and women who, with the break of dawn off Sandy Hook, have strained their eyes to the West for the first glimpse of the New World. They came to us speaking many tongues—but a single language, the universal language of human aspiration. How well their hopes were justified is proved by the record of what they achieved. They not only found freedom in the New World, but by their effort and devotion, they made the New World's freedom safer, richer, more far-reaching, more capable of growth."

Greatest Free Government

Justice Murphy declared: "Our nation has been built upon democratic principles. One of these principles is that each among us is to be treated as a human being without regard to the land from which his forefathers came, his racial background, his creed. We should not think of ourselves as Jews or Gentiles. We are American. If any community in our nation betrays the tenets of civil and religious liberty a damaging blow will be inflicted on the greatest system of free government known to man.

"Too few Americans know American history. Men unrelated in racial origin, drawn from every corner of the earth, and professing various religious creeds, combined their efforts and their talents to create a 'New World' of free men. From the first until this hour it has been our duty, if we really believe in democracy, to secure each man against injustice by his fellows, prevent discrimination and preserve for him his right to hold the religious views that best meet his own soul needs."

It Was Inevitable

When a resident of Vancouver, British Columbia, was brought before a magistrate on a charge of intoxication he received a fine and a long lecture on temperance. The climax of the harangue was an impassioned demand that the miscreant attend a showing of "The Lost Weekend" and learn from Ray Milland what the future held for him if he did not mend his ways.

Perfect Film Poll

Voting for the year's ten best pictures has now reached a group of men who were not polluted by outside influences nor interests—men whose opinions could not be swayed by expensive dinners from the producers, whose minds were in a position to think completely freely. They chose RKO's "The Bells of St. Mary's" as the leader of the first ten films. The poll took place at San Quentin prison.

Rank Plans 'Immediate' Start on 20 New Houses

With the arrival in Toronto this week of John Davis, trade ambassador for J. Arthur Rank, it was learned that Odeon Theatres of Canada expects to start an immediate building program that calls for 15 to 20 theatres in the Dominion during the next eighteen months. Davis himself said in an interview that the first houses built will be show cases in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa, where properties have already been acquired. Rank is partner with Paul L. Nathanson in the operation of Odeon Theatres of Canada.

Asked how Odeon was able to go into such extensive construction in view of the labor and materials situation, Davis added the proviso "if strikes in the States and elsewhere do not interfere." Scarcity of materials, equipment and skilled labor had delayed various earlier projects, including the Nathanson-Rank studio at Toronto. This is also expected to get under way soon, Davis said.

In connection with recent alliances signed by Rank with American film interests, Davis declared that the quota of Hollywood pictures would be released in Canada through the Eagle-Lion office in Toronto, in addition to the full list of British pictures produced by Rank.

Kerr Succeeds Glenn Cook as Monogram Production Manager

Charles Kerr, liaison between the Signal Corps and studios in the production of training films for the past 2½ years, has been appointed production manager at Monogram, succeeding Glenn Cook, who has been elevated to the position of supervisor of production. Kerr has made one picture since leaving government service, acting as production manager on recently completed Lum and Abner film at RKO.

Govt. Asks Griffiths Be Adjudged Guilty

A formal brief asking that the Griffith Amusement Co. and L. C. and H. J. Griffith be found guilty of specific violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act was laid by the Department of Justice before Judge Edgar S. Vaught in Oklahoma City this week. It was the first development in the Griffith case in a long time, for the brief, of great length, was prepared only after long delay. Attorneys for the Griffith interests declared that on a quick perusal they felt the new Government brief contained no surprises.

The defendants now have sixty days in which to file their answering brief, giving their version of what the Judge's decision should be. No ruling by Judge Vaught is expected until fall, and then the chances are it will be appealed by the losing party.

The suit against the Griffiths was first filed in 1938, charging illegal coercion of independents in 15 cities of Oklahoma and Texas. After long preparation the case finally came to trial in 1945.

Kirsch New National Allied President

Jack Kirsch, president of Allied Theatres of Illinois, was elected president of Allied States Association at the annual board meeting of the national organization at the Warwick Hotel, New York, this week. Kirsch succeeds Martin G. Smith, president of the Ohio Allied, who had served two terms as head of the national organization. The new president entered exhibition in 1930 and became president of Illinois Allied in 1938.

Jack Kirsch

Harry Lowenstein, president of New Jersey Allied, was elected secretary of the association succeeding Roy E. Harrold of Indiana. Other officers, all of whom were re-elected, were P. J. Wood, Ohio, recording secretary; William L. Ainsworth, Wisconsin, treasurer; Colonel H. A. Cole, Texas; Ray Branch, Michigan; Jack Kirsch, Illinois and Irving Dollinger, New Jersey, regional vice-presidents; Abram F. Myers, general counsel and board chairman and W. A. Steffes and H. A. Blum, honorary national councilors. Sydney Samuelson, Cole, Kirsch, M. A. Rosenberg, Smith, Myers and Nathan Yamins were relected to the executive committee.

Theatre Balcony Falls

Nineteen persons were slightly injured last Wednesday, when a section of plaster on the underside of the balcony of the Squire Theatre, New York, fell into the rear orchestra seats. The section that fell was 20 feet long and 10 across. Approximately 120 patrons were in the house at the time of the accident, the cause of which is still undetermined.

'C & C' Due Next Fall

J. Arthur Rank's gargantuan "Caesar and Cleopatra," whose release here it was feared would be delayed indefinitely because of Technicolor print tie-ups, has now been scheduled for special release next fall in the United States and Canada, it was learned this week. A big exploitation campaign is already in preparation which will run the nut of the big picture beyond the already achieved mark of $5,000,000.

Spyros Skouras Is National Chairman of Red Cross Drive

Spyros P. Skouras, 20th-Fox president, has accepted the post of national chairman of the industry's Red Cross drive which will be conducted by 16,000 theatres from March 14 to 20. In accepting the post of chairman, Skouras pointed out that in excess of $18 million had been collected from theatre audiences for the Red Cross in the past three years and it would be his aim to top the figures for any previous drive.

Harold J. Fitzgerald, president of Fox Wisconsin Theatres, has been appointed national campaign director for the drive by Skouras, with Seymour Peiser, advertising and publicity director of Fox West Coast Theatres, and B. J. Hynes, managing director of Fox Intermountain Amusement Corp., appointed as Fitzgerald's executive assistants. Sam Shain will act as executive assistant for Skouras. Fitzgerald will make his headquarters at the 20th-Fox home office.

William Heineman Joins UWP As V-P And Sales Manager

William J. Heineman, general sales manager of Samuel Goldwyn Porductions, was relieved of his contract this week and on Monday will join United World Pictures, Inc. as vice-president and general sales manager. Heineman, a veteran of the industry, entered the business 27 years ago with Pathe in Seattle, later becoming sales manager of the First National Seattle office. He operated an independent exchange in Butte before joining Universal in 1925 as short subject sales manager in San Francisco. At Universal he made rapid steps until he became assistant general sales manager.

N.Y. Fuel Emergency Kills Holiday Receipts

The picture theatres and Broadway in general took it on the chin this week as a result of Mayor O'Dwyer's drastic fuel emergency order which placed New York under virtual martial law, minus the troops. All business was suspended on Lincoln's Birthday, including film, legitimate, and opera performances, beginning the evening before at midnight. By 6 p.m. the Mayor had lifted the suspension and the theatres were allowed to reopen. However, the short notice afforded the public kept many prospective patrons at home, and the theatres all reported business was far off; with attendance running from a third to half capacity. This, however, came as a respite, for managers of the first-run houses estimated that if the ban had gone on for another day, more than $1,000,000 would have been lost to the box-office. Although no figures were available, it was generally assumed the losses came to about $250,000.

Most houses, shut by the executive order, kept skeleton crews on duty all day, and were ready instantaneously to re-open. Taking Broadway's show-windows as a criterion, the Radio City Music Hall reported a line of 1200 persons when it opened at 6:30 p.m. The house seats a few hundred under 6000. Despite the inability of the management to put on the stage show, MGM's "Adventure" plus short subjects drew capacity crowds as the evening progressed. The Paramount likewise, drew near capacity audiences for "Miss Susie Slagles's" aided by the personal appearance of Danny Kaye. The Roxy, however, with "Fallen Angel" and Carmen Miranda heading the stage show, was only playing to half capacity business for its 6000 seats. The house ordinarily would have grossed $25,000 on the day. The Capitol, with "The Harvey Girls," also played to half-capacity. Neighborhood houses, circuit operated, reported business below par as a general average.

Four in New Paramount Block

Paramount this week announced that the fifth block of releases for the 1945-46 season will be composed of four features. The pictures in the latest block are: 'To Each His Own," "Our Hearts Were Growing Up," "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers," and "Hot Cargo."

LONDON OBSERVATIONS

By Jock MacGregor

The more one watches the activities of J. Arthur Rank, the more one realizes what a powerful fight he is putting up against Hollywood. His pictures may not be setting America on fire, but elsewhere they are cutting into playing time of Hollywood product.

All his recent deals, though involving territories and matters thousands of miles from Hollywood, dig deeply at the heart of American production. They are (1) acquisition of the leading theatres in Eire; (2) a working arrangement with the leading Australian circuit, and (3) acquisition of French productions for showing and distribution, with sub-titles or dubbed dialog by his cuircuits and organizations.

Furthermore, there is no hint that Rank will restrict himself to any particular territory. It would seem that wherever a film could be shown, Rank is interested. His scouts are reconnoitering Egypt, South America and the Continent.

Indeed, it woud appear not inappropriate for the Hollywood producers to seek additional theatre alliances throughout the world before these are lost.

Rank now announces the appointment of Air Commodore F. M. F. West, VC, CBE, MC, Director of Foreign Liaison at the Air Ministry, as assistant managing director of Eagle-Lion. Since he has been 31½ years in the services, it is likely he has much to learn about the industry and that he will begin by being, to a great extent, a "goodwill ambassador" for the Rank interests.

Having had six films running concurrently in the West End, Rank now has only "Caesar and Cleopatra," which is in its ninth week at the Odeon, Marble Arch, where despite one of the worst presses on record and being the butt of many alleged radio comedians' cracks, it is doing nicely. Gabriel Pascal, its producer, it is alleged, having heard that David Selznick has spent more money on "Duel in the Sun," is contemplating flying to Hollywood to obtain the formula.

Pascal is now planning the production of G. B. Shaw's "St. Joan." It is not yet known whether Rank will handle this release.

At present 24 films are in production in British studios and at least 16 are for world-wide release. Three are in Technicolor and 14 are to be handled by Rank.

THE BOX OFFICE SLANT

Frontier Gun Law

Columbia Western with Music 58 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) An average Western with music to relieve the dramatic situations. Ought to please followers of this type of picture.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Will get by in usual Western runs, doing nothing to impair Charles Starrett's standing or raise it.

Cast: Charles Starrett, Tex Harding, Dub Taylor, Jean Steven, Weldon Heyburn, Al Trace and his Silly Symphonists. Credits: Directed by Derwin Abrahams. Screenplay by Bennett Cohen from an original by Victor McLeod. Photography, Glen Cano. Produced by Colbert Clark.

Plot: When a masked gang of rustlers known as the "Phantoms" make too much trouble around Mesa City, "The Durango Kid" beats them at their own game. He dons a disguise, too, so no one will know his true identity. He saves an innocent rancher from being framed as the leader of the gang, and catches the true culprit, who had been masquerading as a crippled newspaper editor.

Comment: It is hard to get anything new into Western plots, but at least this film certainly keeps the usual story rolling fast. Starrett changes horses and costumes every few feet, and Weldon Heyburn rushes from a supposedly invalid chair to his horse at night, to lead his gang. In between times, Al Trace and his boys do a good job of letting the audience forget its tenseness by giving out with corny lyrics. Starrett really has the appearance and voice for his role, and his enunciation is much better than the average Western star. Weldon Heyburn does very well by his villain's role. The picture has action—and that's what the Saturday afternoon and small towns audiences want.

Cinderella Jones

Warner Bros. Comedy 88 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) A few laughs, some pleasant performances and some pleasing people add up to just a fair comedy.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: The marquee names are hardly strong enough to provide adequate drawing power, but the outstanding exploitation campaign provided by Warners, now getting under way, may build it into a good attraction.

Plot: Joan Leslie wangles her way into a men's university by promising to generously endow the institution after she collects an inheritance predicated upon her marriage to a man with the equivalent of an intelligence quotient of at least 150; which is why she wanted to matriculate in a men's college in the first place. Joan is slightly dumb and becomes involved in romantic tangles with professor William Prince and band leader Robert Alda, switching from one to the other. She finally discovers she loves Alda and weds him just under the deadline prescribed in her benefactor's will.

Comment: The idea was good, the performers are nice pleasant people, but the picture doesn't measure up to what exhibitors have come to expect from Warner Bros. It is a zany story that transcends the bounds of acceptability. It is neither flesh or fowl—a light comedy one minute and the utmost in farce comedy the next, even to the extent of resorting to the principals falling or being pushed into water for a laugh. There are some tuneful songs which are well done, and not much more could be asked from Joan Leslie, Robert Alda, Sakall and the others than they deliver here; but even with these attributes, the film adds up to no more than just a fair comedy. Without the top exploitation campaign dreamed up in the Warner home office and being delivered with gusto by Warners' exploiteers around the country, this would deserve no better than top feature, middle-of-the-week booking. But those Warner boys probably will do much better with it than this. A check on the "Search for Cinderella" plans should immediately be made by every exhibitor who will play the film. It can be adapted to nearly every exhibition spot to increase business.

Romance of the West

(Color)

PRC Western 58 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Good colorful Western with the customary ingredients for the outdoor fans.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Second of the series of Eddie Dean color films should do okay in the usual spot.

Plot: Three respected citizens of the town arrange for some renegade whites and outlaw Indians to make trouble on the Indian reservation so that the government will force the Indians off the land. They plan to get the land because it contains huge deposits of silver, and it is up to Eddie Dean, an Indian agent, to clear up the matter, so that both the Indians and the white folk can live happily together.

Comment: Second in the Eddie Dean color series from PRC, this picture is swell fare for the western and outdoor fans, for though it is a little low on action, it has enough eye appeal in the use of color and enough ear appeal in Dean's vocalizing to make it a good offering in the spots where westerns are the order of the day. Colorful and attractive are the background scenes and the color photography is so smooth and rich that it makes everything look perfectly natural, without any glaring highlights. Three song numbers are pleasingly presented by Dean in fine voice and there's enough action in the Cowboy-and-Indian story to hold the interest and keep the yarn from lagging. Credit for the production and direction goes to Robert Emmett, who deserves a hand for the original idea inserted in a formula western when he put a Padre on a horse and made him the third member of the usual triangle who are out helping law and justice.

Brief Encounter

Univ. (Eagle Lion) Drama 95 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Cleverly conceived, finely acted and superbly directed adult story of middle-aged indiscretion.

BOX-OFFICE SLANTS: Should appeal immensely to discerning audiences, but lack of stars and plot may not attract others.

Cast: Celia Johnson, Trevor Howard, Stanley Holloway and others. Credits: Produced, written and conceived by Noel Coward. Directed by David Lean. A Cine-Guild production.

Plot: Celia, respectably married to a North Country businessman, meets Howard, a doctor and also married, when shopping in a nearby city. From this casual acquaintance, a friendship springs up and this develops against their wills into a romance. They know they are wrong in deceiving their families and try to break it off without success. Howard finds the solution in accepting an appointment overseas and sails without the respective partners being any the wiser as to how near they were to the divorce court.

Comment: As a film "Brief Encounter" is brilliant, cleverly conceived, finely acted and superbly directed. As a box-office proposition, it is another matter. It is an adult subject and while it should appeal immensely to discerning audiences, the younger moviegoers who form the bulk of the audience may find it rather heavy going. It is a story of middle-aged indiscretion (the characters are about 40), and the fact that they nearly go "off the rails" may be frowned upon by Church, Youth and other organizations. Noel Coward's script bristles with brilliant touches and the gentle satirizing of the extravagant use of superlatives in an NSS trailer and the slides when the two principals attend a cinema is one of the funniest sequences in any picture. The direction of David Lean, a comparative newcomer who has graduated since the war from the cutting room, is most interesting and augurs well for the future of this young man. The acting is uniformly good by a cast which has been recruited mainly from the West End stage and is unknown in the United States, with Celia Johnson masterly as the wife drawn between duty and love. There are no spectacle scenes and much of the action takes place within a railroad depot. Other than Coward's name it has little to sell to American audiences.

Tarzan and the Leopard Woman

RKO Radio Adventure 72 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Tarzan fans, particularly the youngsters, will like it. Others, if they can view it objectively, will be amused rather than excited.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Where previous Tarzan adventures have done well this will do all right. Suitable for double bill situations.

Cast: Johnny Weissmuller, Brenda Joyce, Johnny Sheffield, Acquanetta, Edgar Barrier, Dennis Hoey, Tommy Cook, Anthony Caruso and others. Credits: Produced by Sol Lesser. Associate producer and director, Kurt Neumann. Original story and screenplay by Carroll Young, based upon the characters created by Edgar Rice Burroughs. Photography, Karl Struss.

Plot: Caravans have been attacked, ostensibly by leopards, but Tarzan notes discrepan-

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

By Jack Jackson

Here's all the details—and fascinating data re the profits to be derived—concerning a good job of merchandising sweets and popcorn in the theatre. There's a liberal education on everything from how to buy the supplies right on through proved methods of effective salesmanship (yes, and the know-how of cooking popcorn the way that makes for good flavor the economical way) in this article by one of America's leading showmen and a cracker-jack reporter in the bargain.

There's plenty of sugar (the bankable variety) fairly oozing from those candy showcases and great gobs of shekels popping out of the popcorn sacks.

The unwanted waif of some 15 years ago—the vending machine—has been transformed into an ornate and inviting center of activity in theatre lobbies and is doing a Trojan job of contributing to the profit column of theatres where proper attention and interest is shown in this customer-demanded service.

Some surprising facts about this phase of theatre operation have been thrust upon me in recent months. Somehow or other a remark made by Frank Rogers of Paramount's Florida Theatres a few years ago to the effect that the circuit had, in its first year of candy merchandising, cleared all expense of showcases, help, etc., and banked a handsome profit failed to make the proper impression. And when Kermit C. Stengle, of the Crescent Amusement Company in Tennessee, told me, at the time of the Government's suit against that company, that there were many theatres on his circuit where the difference in profit and loss was measured in candy and popcorn business, I thought he was giving me "the business."

A Liberal Education

For some months past I've had an intensive education in popcorn and candy merchandising thrust upon me. Careful scrutiny of week to week reports from different theatres showed such consistent contrast as to warrant thorough investigation to determine the reason for the wide variation in daily sales where patronage and clientele seemed equal. I am indebted to two people for the information I am passing along to you in this article; Lafe Pfieffer, chief of the miscellaneous revenue department of Interstate Theatres, and Frank Fletcher, manager of a 900 seat subsequent run theatre whose candy and popcorn receipts consistently exceed 30 per cent of his box-office revenue.

The over all picture, from Pfieffer, brings to light the following salient points that are vitally important to all theatres catering to the "crunch and crumple" demands of their patrons.

Of first importance is a caliper and slide rule estimate of the consumer market to guide the quality and quantity of your purchases. The highest chargeoff is invariably due to overbuying and consequent loss through spoilage. Of next importance is the condition and location of the store-room where reserve supplies are kept. Excess heat or dampness is harmful to both candy and popcorn and a constant war against bugs must be waged.

Container Important

Next in importance is the container or receptacle in which the merchandise is dispensed. Care must also be taken of these units, as unattractive containers discourage sales. And, the inventory on the containers is every bit as important as the merchandise itself if you would avoid serious shortages. These containers and receptacles are your only check on the volume of merchandise sold and they should be doled out to the salespeople in predetermined quantities and accounted for against the cash register contents at the end of the day.

It's Stunts Like This That Build Goodwill

Next to watching your box-office, watch your goodwill! It is an asset which will pay off in far bigger dividends that you think, and its importance, especially for a theatre situated in a small town or city, should never be underestimated. This goodwill applies not only to the patrons who attend your theatre but also to those who work for you and with you.

To theatremen on the outlook for establishing goodwill, a vivid example of creating this friendly feeling would be to permit, on the opening date of some important coming attraction, the Mayor, the Chiefs of the Police and Fire Department, the Postmaster, the Sheriff and the editors of each paper, to send a pair of tickets to the opening, to the chiefs, postmasters, editors and etc., in communities within a reasonable radius.

Your duty would consist of sending out the letters of invitation and getting their permission to sign them. Then relay a story to the newspapers in each of those towns saying that: "The Sheriff, Postmaster, editor and etc., of Littleburg, have been invited as guests of the Sheriff, Postmaster, editor and etc., of Bigtown, to attend the initial showing of (name of film) at (name of theatre), in an effort to encourage closer friendship, harmony and relationship between officials and business men of the two communities."

If possible, try to stage a dinner for them at the local hostelry, with the hotel management throwing the banquet in return for plenty of good publicity.

Of course, if you are on your toes and wide awake, you realize the value of goodwill and you know the kind of business it brings in the long run. Cultivate it by friendly relationships with city, town or state officials, business and small store men, radio managers and editors.

Watch Interim Lighting

The theatre may present too dark and dingy an appearance when the majority of front lights have been extinguished at the start of the last performance. A check should be made to see that lighting is sufficient at these times to insure safety of departing patrons and passers-by.

Inspect Ticket Machines

Automatic ticket machines get considerable wear and tear and should be cleaned, oiled and inspected regularly as well as all other mechanical devices in the theatre.

Know Your Groceries?

Coin machines for vending frozen fruits, vegetables and meats will soon be placed in theatre lobbies for the accommodation of matinee going housewives, according to the Refrigeration Equipment Manufacturers Association. Other machines are being planned for the sale of delicatessen items, including potato salad, cheese and bakery specialties.

(One old-time vaudeville ham, told of this development said: "Well, I'm glad—glad that is that they didn't have those things when I played the Gus Sun circuit.")

From what I am able to gather, popcorn kettles are temperamental critters that won't cooperate properly unless they are given every possible attention. Don't get 'em too hot. Don't put in too much oil. Don't put in too much salt. Don't put in too much corn. (I'll provide specific instructions as they were given me later in this article). But, by all means, see that they are kept immaculately clean. It seems that the oil used in popping corn contains carbon and if it is allowed to accumulate it becomes incrusted and requires scraping. Pfieffer advises that the kettles be washed each day with hand soap—a real thorough washing—to guarantee best results.

I'd like to inject a few thoughts of my own right here for the benefit of those who may be new—or those who may be contemplating entry into—the popcorn and candy business.

Get ready to increase your cleaning staff and add to the allotment of cleaning supplies. Prepare yourself for some cleaning bills for patrons whose clothes become soiled when vandals stick their used wads of gum on the backs and cushions of seats. Get an added supply of trash cans to take care of the extra rubbish. And, the carpets are going to need thorough cleaning more frequently.

To offset this "nuisance" and added expense you can, if you do the right kind of a job, figure conservatively on adding 20 per cent or better to your daily theatre receipts. Of this amount you can, if you watch the leaks and avoid the pitfalls, depend upon 35 to 40 per cent clear profit. In the average theatre that kind of "lettuce" will buy a lot of cleaning supplies and take care of a neat number of salaries while still leaving a sizable sack to tote to the bank. Figure out for yourself whether the effort is worthwhile. Now about the actual job of maneuvering the customers to the concession stand and exchanging confections for currency.

Location Important

The location of the stand is highly important and should, wherever possible be located directly in front of the entrance. Next choice is to the right of the entrance. Fletcher, who does an outstanding two-fisted job at one of these trading posts, tells me that stands located to the left of the entrance don't garner as much coin and that maintaining a sidewalk or street level stand is liable to require a special license—since it can't be considered as a service to theatre customers only—and, in the instance of group theatre operation—is liable to come in for chain store and other special taxes.

The counters, cases and fixtures must be kept clean and inviting. The attendants, girls if possible, should be personally attractive, neatly attired, exemplary in conduct, smilingly polite and pleasant to customers, alert to the possibility of "extra" sales to those who have already purchased and continue to "window shop," quick in consummating sales and adroit at handling the ever-growing "masher" menace. Since these girls are dispensing food it is essential that all local and state health laws be complied with and the necessary permits or credentials be prominently displayed.

Dress the Showcase

Of equal importance to the selection of proper attendants is the "dressing" of the showcases and counters. Attractive displays will often dispose of the hard-to-sell units that the most experienced and sagacious buyers often find themselves burdened with. Variety is essential to volume sales as well as advantageous in effecting complete turnover before Old Man Decay and his partner Deterioration smear up the profit sheet with their mouldy mittens.

I can already hear the yell that is going up from some of you who have found sugar rationing, shortage of merchandise and other obstacles barring the way to adequate supplies of even the less wanted items. You'll say that the chap talking about variety "is nuts" but let me give you the outline of Fletcher's fruitful finagling. He first determined what concerns sold the units of merchandise he felt most suitable to his customer demands and then proceeded to go, in person, to call on the heads of those establishments. Where using the telephone would have brought an emphatic "no" the personal visit brought forth conversation and explanation. A friendly acceptance of the merchants' refusal and an invitation to visit the theatre—accompanied by a couple of passes—eventually broke down the resistance. It took several visits to do it but a few months found Fletcher on the preferred list and being called by phone when the difficult-to-secure items became periodically available. Not only his own theatre but three others have benefitted from his contacts.

They Don't Deliver

I forgot to mention that the candy dealers don't deliver. Fletcher has to go after it—and so will you—but he buys for 5 to 10 per cent less than from the wagon salesmen.

Briefly stated the Fletcher formula seems something like this:

Buy, or try to buy, with a view of realizing 30 per cent profit and when forced to lower brackets cover with bulk candy—sacked by the attendants before it is offered for sale—on which you can realize 2 to 3 hundred per cent.

Don't force customers to buy something they don't want by tieing an unwanted unit to a chocolate bar or other desired merchandise.

Don't run out of all the "top line" units but offer them in small quantities at frequent intervals to stimulate sales.

Make sure that the attendants are always patient, smiling, polite and continually putting out those "thank you's" that makes folks satisfied with something they didn't want.

Now for some "lowdown" on the popcorn end of the business and believe you me those white-hatted kernels are capable of leading a sizable army of Uncle Sam's greenbacks into your cash register. I am reliably informed that considerable of the candy is dispensed to customers who are floated up to the counter on the aroma waves emanating from the hot corn kettle.

Too much heat, too much corn, too much oil or too much salt only serves to cut the profit without adding anything to the taste or desirability of the finished product. Best results are obtained by using only sufficient oil to cover the bottom of the kettle. Most wholesale dealers in popcorn provide a measuring cup for this purpose as well as a measure for handling the proper amount of corn. The oil should be allowed to get hot before the grain is added. A tablespoonful of popcorn salt and keeping the kettle from becoming too hot—the corn gets parched instead of popped unless the heat is kept medium—guarantees profits that swell almost as fast as the corn and satisfaction to the purchasers.

Output Varies

My investigation brought forth a sizable discrepancy in computing the expected output. Lafe Pfieffer considers 12 to 15 five cent sacks to a pound of corn and 55 to 65 five cent sacks to a pint of oil as being a good yield. But my friend Fletcher's reports show an average of 16 to 18 sacks per pound of corn and 75 to 80 sacks to the pint of oil.

The extra revenue to be made from properly operated concession stands is surprisingly high but I'd like to admonish against the possibility of the odor of popcorn profits distracting your attention from the sale of theatre tickets. Without the people attracted by the picture there would be little or no candy business. Keep selling your attractions and treat the popcorn and candy as a desirable sideline that augments—but does not and can not—substitute for the elemental and essential services of the theatre proper.

Helpful Hint

The Southern California Theatre Owners Association has reminded members of a timely idea that may well be passed on to other exhibitors.

The California Fire Marshal's Office advised the association that after a period of time flame-retardent chemicals lose their effectiveness. The association, therefore, recommends that every theatreman make tests so as to prevent a false sense of security from prevailing. It was also suggested that each theatre owner, for his own protection, flame proof carpets and purniture, particularly in the lobby an lounge, as well as carpets in the washrooms.

Rose Sells "Dakota" With Classified Twist

A wheel of chance in the theatre lobby, a new twist on classified advertising usage, a street ballyhoo with a new angle and the use of strategically located silk-screened art cards comprised the highlights of manager Harry A. Rose's campaign on Republic's "Dakota" when the John Wayne starrer played the Loew-Poli-Majestic Theatre, Bridgeport.

Rose adapted an old wheel of chance by dressing it up with western trimming, filling in the center space with stills and advertising copy about the picture. The copy read "Free . . . to the Ladies. . . . Spin this DAKOTA wheel. If it stops on either star you receive a guest ticket to see, etc., etc." A young man dressed in cowboy attire attended the wheel which attracted considerable attention.

The classified advertising stunt entailed placing ads in the local newspapers a week in advance of opening in which Rose stated: "Wanted—Miniature covered wagon for display during the engagement of 'Dakota' which starts Monday at Loew's Majestic Theatre." The ad response was so great that Rose not only obtained the miniature covered wagon he ostensibly wanted but received and took advantage of offers to display spurs, cowboy hats and other pieces of western equipment.

The street ballyhoo is an example of how a theater manager can use what he can get and make it suffice even better than he might have done if the original was on hand for use. Rose got a modern trailer and plastered it with copy telling the populace about the modern conveniences of the trailer as compared with the covered wagons used in "Dakota" etc. The trailer covered the town and was displayed in front of the theatre on opening day.

Distribution of the silk-screened process cards, mounted with stills from the film, rounded out the campaign.

No 'Picket' Ballyhoo!

Loew's Theatre circuit has advised managers and publicity men to be extremely careful not to use any street ballyhoo that can possibly be confused with picketing.

UNIQUE. The street car advertising shown here is not unique in itself, but the fact that the radio station paid for it certainly is. The ads were promoted by Manager Morris Rosenthal, Loew-Poli Theatre, New Haven, for RKO's "The Bells of St. Mary's."

Campaign So Big 3 Theatres Are Required for Premiere

'Demon Rum' Angle Tried And Works for 'Weekend' Engagement in Rochester

One of the best organized publicity and exploitation campaigns ever to hit Rochester was brought to a triumphant close just prior to that city's three-theatre midnight benefit premiere of Paramount's "The Lost Weekend" Friday (Feb. 15) a week in advance of the film's regularly scheduled showing at the Palace Theatre, due Wednesday (Feb. 21). The full cooperation of the city's newspapers, business men, Chamber of Commerce and Junior Chamber of Commerce were enlisted to sell more than 10,000 tickets to the gala openings.

The film was originally scheduled to premiere at the Palace, but public reception to the idea was so great as to make it a triple-header with the Century and Temple theatres enlisted to handle the overflow ticket demand.

Screened for Crusader

Following a special screening of the film for Frank Gannett, publisher of a chain of newspapers including Rochester dailies, and a well known anti-liquor crusader according to a currently published biography in a New York City daily newspaper, Mr. Gannett turned the full resources of his newspapers loose to publicize a midnight show of the film for the benefit of the Charity Fund of the Junior Chamber of Commerce with that organization responsible for the sale of tickets. Publicity started a month in advance of the show date with columnists breaking stories and with space increasing daily to avalanche proportions.

With 400 members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce acting as salesmen, divided into three groups which reported progress daily, the initial printing of 3000 tickets was increased almost immediately to 10,000 to meet the demand, which in turn necessitated the use of the two additional theatres.

Window cards were placed in every downtown store window and in every manufacturing plant in the city including Bausch and Lomb, General Motors, Eastman Kodak and Western Electric with one or more ticket-selling agents in each factory aided by daily announcements over the plants' public address systems.

Radio Gives It Plenty

Radio stations plugged the event daily on both sponsored and unsponsored time with fashion commentators and news announcers covering the various happenings on the night of the premiere.

Speakers from the Chamber of Commerce appeared at all civic club luncheons such as Rotary, Lions and Kiwanis to further publicize the benefit performance and the Chamber of Commerce mailed out 5000 mimeographed folders and is planning an additional one with comments from local newspaper men and business men who were present at the premiere. Special letters also were sent to ministers, schools and colleges. Additional publicity will be planted by the publicity departments of the Chamber of Commerce and General Motors who covered the openings with their own reporters and staff photographers.

To add an additional gala touch Western Electric floodlighted the entire Palace Theatre block from 9 p.m. to midnight of the premiere. This was a "first" for Rochester.

Regular run of "The Lost Weekend" starts Wednesday (Feb. 21st) at the Palace, six days after the special premiere, and is expected to set Rochester attendance records, based on apparent results of the city-wide excitement attending the opening.

The entire campaign was conceived and executed by Alec Moss, Paramount exploitation director; Ed Wall, Paramount special field representative, and Jay Golden of the Palace Theatre, Rochester.

Hopper-Breneman Hat Contest Under Way

The Tom Breneman-Hedda Hopper national hat contest was launched on Miss Hopper's radio program last Monday evening (11) with Breneman appearing as her guest. The contest, which closes March 15, is being held in conjunction with Golden Productions' "Breakfast in Hollywood," United Artists picture starring Breneman.

A 1946 automobile and a two-week excursion to Mexico City for two persons is offered as first prize to the contestant creating the most imaginative, original and distinctive woman's hat in America.

Essay Writers Tell How They Were 'Cornered'

A "Cornered" contest in connection with the picture of that title was staged with success by the RKO Castle Hill, Pelham and Chester Theatres in cooperation with the Parkchester (N. Y.) Press-Review. Prizes for the best letters describing the tightest spot they were ever in and how they got out of it, consisted of a $25 Victory bond and 12 pair of guest tickets to the Dick Powell picture.

'Spell' Bounces Back

George Kraska and Joe Di Pesa, publicists for Loew's Theatres in New England, really had a stunt when they escorted locally-selected Miss Spellbound to the Sportsmens Show in Boston where, by pre-arrangement Chief Needahbeh, Penobscot chieftain from Oldtown, Maine, did a swooning act upon beholding the young lady's charms. The idea that the old Indian was spellbound by Miss Spellbound went over all right, but the crowd did a double take when Miss Spellbound herself fainted after the Indian recovered. The surprise twist also held Kraska and Di Pesa spellbound.—BO.

Rosenthal Credits Churches, Parochial Schools for Success of 'Bells' Campaign

Focusing the major part of his exploitation toward the predominantly Catholic population of New Haven, Conn., Manager Morris Rosenthal succeeded in working successfully with all of the city's 10 Parochial schools and with the churches to obtain a bang-up campaign on RKO Radio's "The Bells of St. Mary's" for its showing at the Loew-Poli Theatre. Newspapers, radio, street car advertising and music store cooperation also were integral parts of the well rounded campaign with special cards in windows, hotel lobbies and restaurants as additional publicity channels.

Perhaps the most important bit of publicity planted by Rosenthal was the appearance of a three-quarter page photograph of Ingrid Bergman as a Sister Superior in the special color section of the New Haven Register. The photo was in full color and the newspaper thought enough of its reader interest to pay for the cost of the color mats used in its reproduction, a departure from the publication's usual policy. Accompanying the photo was a three-column biographical story about the star with generous mention of "The Bells of St. Mary's." This feature, too, reflected the newspaper's recognition of the city's predominantly Catholic population.

On the same Sunday of the color photograph, the Register news columns reproduced a three-column photograph of school children from 10 Parochial schools, each carrying a souvenir doll dressed as a nun. The dolls were to be awarded to individual classrooms in the schools for winning essays in the "Bells of St. Mary's" contest being conducted at the time.

Lucky Newspaper Break

Another important newspaper break, unsolicited as the result of Rosenthal's friendship with newspaper men in New Haven, came when the Journal-Courier front-paged an item about an automobile stolen from in front of the theatre. The reporter who wrote the story angled it along the lines of "If 'The Bells of St. Mary's' could only speak it could tell who stole the car, etc.," and mentioned that the film was playing at the Loew-Poli Theatre. A nice break which could not have occurred had not Rosenthal constantly gone out of his way to cultivate theatre-newspaper relationships.

One of New Haven's biggest music stores also hopped on the publicity band-wagon by taking a cooperative ad in the city's newspapers and necessarily paying for it at regular amusement rates which, of course, are higher than the rates obtainable by the store had it not connected its merchandising story directly with the film's playdate.

Schools Sponsor Contest

An essay contest was sparked by a special morning showing of "The Bells," with all Parochial School children attending in the custody of the Sisters. The children paid regular admission prices, with the house completely sold out. Dolls were made up to resemble Ingrid Bergman as the Sister Superior she plays in the picture to be given as prizes for the best essay. Additional valuable cooperation was obtained from the Catholic church locally as priests made announcements at churches urging parishioners to see the picture.

The most important window display obtained by Rosenthal was with the Loomis Temple of Music, New Haven's largest music store which decorated its 20-foot main window exclusively with material pertaining to the music from "The Bells." Rosenthal supplied three 40x60 photographic enlargements, 10 Nun dolls, many 11x14 stills and other picture advertising material to make the window display outstanding.

A special setpiece lobby display named the 10 outstanding pictures of last year, including Oscar awards, and nominated "The Bells" as this year's outstanding candidate for high honor.

Window cards blanketed the downtown area and special displays were set up in hotel lobbies, with art cards given prominent display in centrally located restaurants.

In Rosenthal's opinion the tieup with the Catholic church and schools definitely brought the theatre increased business, since it marked the first time that priests indorsed a motion picture from the pulpits and the first time the Sisters talked about a film in the classrooms.

Believe It Or Not

That recent story of the earth's contact with the moon will have to make way for this latest eye-opener. Down Louisville way, A. A. Daugherty, Times film critic and columnist, smashed all known precedent when he invited five guest critics, winners of a contest, to attend Warner's "My Reputation" opening at the Mary Anderson Theatre. His purpose in doing so (and get this) was to write his review on the basis of their combined opinions.

Scripps-Howard Papers In 'Reputation' Contest

Most, if not all, of the 20 Scripps-Howard newspapers in leading cities will handle an outstanding promotion in connection with the local exhibitions of Warners' "My Reputation," by running a contest on the subject of "What My Reputation Means to Me." Contests in each newspaper are to be timed with the local release of the picture.

The plan has been approved by the Promotion Department of the newspaper chain and passed along to its 20 member newspapers and already is in operation in some cities, with others to follow.

The contest will require readers to send in statement of 100 words or less telling "What My Reputation Means to Me," with winners to be awarded $100. A national grand prize of a $500 Victory Bond also is under consideration provided a sufficient number of the newspapers carry the contest locally.

DISTINCTIVE. One of a series of 80 window displays worked out by Alec Moss, Paramount exploitation manager in cooperation with Bernard Geiss, advertising manager of Grosset and Dunlap, book publishers, for the mutual promotion of "Love Letters." The publishing outfit's promotional endeavor, resulting in the large number of window displays, was arranged to coincide with showings of the film in key cities.

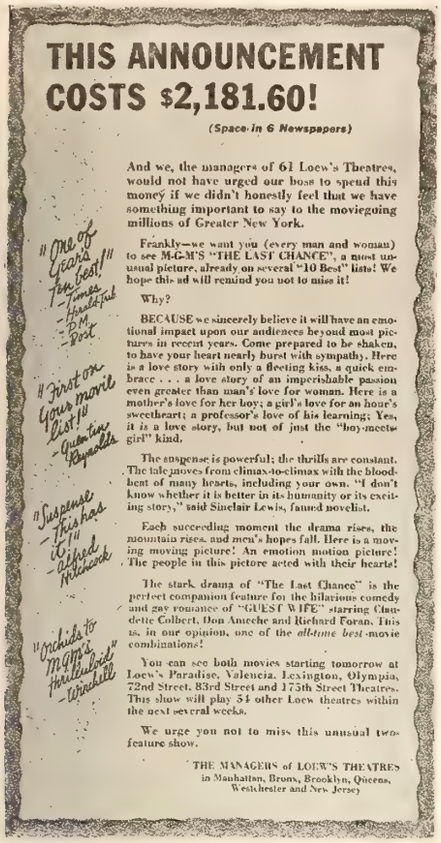
Widespread Tieup Set On 'Kitty' in Canada

"Kitty" was the showcase in a tieup designed by Win Barron, Paramount's field representative in Canada, in an effort to make the Dominion "Kitty"-conscious.

In a land where "the great open spaces" is more than a phrase, any tieup considered valuable is figured in the hundreds, due to the fact that a couple of hundred window displays reaches as proportionately a large number of people as does a couple of thousand in the U. S. The film tieup for the Dominion is set for 8000 points-of-sale of the vest pocket edition of the Rosamond Marshall best-seller.

Barron, in collaboration with the William Collins publishing outfit, arranged for three different sized display posters to be distributed to the 8000 outlets. Since the book is selling tremendously in Canada, the posters are slated to go into windows along with stills and other special display material with appropriate theatre and playdate plugs.

To top the campaign, 400 trucks will be bannered with theatre and playdate information. And 400 trucks can pass along a lot of information.



Houston Department Store Aids In 'San Antonio' Exploitation

In addition to putting on an elaborate window display devoted to Warners' "San Antonio" during its run at the Majestic Theatre, Houston, the big Sakowitz Department store of that city ran tie-in boxes in all its ads appearing in three local newspapers.

Churches Plug 'Enchanted Forest'

The Mary Anderson Theatre in Louisville, Ky. got a real break when it played PRC's "Enchanted Forest" in that it obtained the complete backing of the Louisville Council of Churches. The Council came right out with a big plug in their monthly bulletin, as follows: "At the Mary Anderson Theatre is a commercial entertainment motion picture that church people can well afford to support. We can not always protest unwholesome movies without approving the better ones. 'Enchanted Forest' has been approved by a large number of club and church people and is endorsed by the Better Films Council, the Kentucky Council for Clean Movies, P.T.A. groups, the Crime Prevention Bureau and many others."

THIS ANNOUNCEMENT COSTS $2,181.60!

(Space in 6 Newspapers)

And we, the managers of 61 Loew's Theatres, would not have urged our boss to spend this money if we didn't honestly feel that we have something important to say to the moviegoing millions of Greater New York.

Frankly—we want you (every man and woman) to see M-G-M'S "THE LAST CHANCE", a most unusual picture, already on several "10 Best" lists! We hope this ad will remind you not to miss it!

Why?

BECAUSE we sincerely believe it will have an emotional impact upon our audiences beyond most pictures in recent years. Come prepared to be shaken, to have your heart nearly burst with sympathy. Here is a love story with only a fleeting kiss, a quick embrace . . . a love story of an imperishable passion even greater than man's love for woman. Here is a mother's love for her boy; a girl's love for an hour's sweetheart; a professor's love of his learning; Yes, it is a love story, but not of just the "boy-meets-girl" kind.

"One of Year's Ten best!" — Times Herald Tribune — N.Y. Post

"First on your movie list!" — Quentin Reynolds

The suspense is powerful; the thrills are constant. The tale moves from climax-to-climax with the bloodheat of many hearts, including your own. "I don't know whether it is better in its humanity or its exciting story," said Sinclair Lewis, famed novelist.

"Suspense — This has it!" — Alfred Hitchcock

Each succeeding moment the drama rises, the mountain rises, and men's hopes fall. Here is a moving moving picture! An emotion motion picture! The people in this picture acted with their hearts!

The stark drama of "The Last Chance" is the perfect companion feature for the hilarious comedy and gay romance of "GUEST WIFE" starring Claudette Colbert, Don Ameche and Richard Foran. This is, in our opinion, one of the all-time best movie combinations!

"Orchids to M-G-M's Hartley and Churchill"

You can see both movies starting tomorrow at Loew's Paradise, Valencia, Lexington, Olympia, 72nd Street, 83rd Street and 175th Street Theatres. This show will play 54 other Loew theatres within the next several weeks.

We urge you not to miss this unusual two-feature show.

THE MANAGERS of LOEW'S THEATRES in Manhattan, Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, Westchester and New Jersey

UNUSUAL. This example of the endorsement type of advertising was placed in nearly every New York City newspaper by Loew's Theatres to add impetus to the showing of MGM-International's "The Last Chance," which has received unanimous praise from New York's and other cities' critics. The weight added to the showings by the very cleverly worded ad has been given a large part of the credit for the film's exceptional showing at the box-offices of the circuit.

Heralds, Guest Tickets, Records Plug 'Doll Face' in Hartford

Loud, attractive, yellow-colored contest heralds boomed Lou Cohen's showing of "Doll Face" at Loew's Poli-Hartford, Hartford, Conn. Tying in with nearly a dozen of the city's music merchants, Cohen had the throwaways distributed at the various stores.

Winners who held lucky heralds received free Perry Como recordings and guest tickets to see the film at the Poli. Warners' lists were posted in the music shops and in the lobby of the theatre. The popular tieup resulted in several window and counter displays.

Sell Music Angles

Ernest Emmerling, head of the advertising and publicity department of Loew's Theatres has sent out an urgent bulletin to the circuit's member organizations to pay special attention to the musical angles of MGM's "The Harvey Girls" in the exploitation agenda. The memo puts special emphasis on naming the important song numbers from the production and urges managers and publicity men to ask "disc jockeys" to do a musical review on the film. Store window and co-op ad cooperation also are urged.

Lyon's Varied Stunts Put Over 'Weekend'

A campaign completely encircling newspapers, radio, bookstores and other effective mediums of exploitation, was deftly executed by Manager Harold Lyon of the Des Moines Theatre, Des Moines, and Jim Castle, Paramount's special field exploiteer, for the opening of "The Lost Weekend."

Opening gun in the campaign was a four-day newspaper advertising program which wound up with large sized display ads, culminating in the now-famous "eye" ad for the opening day.

Well Aired in Advance

Three radio stations flashed spot announcements, in addition to Tri-States, who on their six programs a week, plugged the film for two weeks in advance of the opening. On another station, the exploiteers promoted a special screening for the network's leading woman commentator, who after viewing the picture, devoted her program to explaining why the film should be the best of the year. Another radio stunt was used whereby a remote control broadcast from a screening room featured interviews with newspaper writers.

A special constructed art poster was placed in the center of the Paramount's lobby, with blow-up heads of the stars, in addition to seven 30x40s and an eight-foot display piece.

Two hundred window cards together with 1000 special bookmarks, were distributed to all local booksellers and department stores. Many shops used attractive window displays.

But the feather in the Lyon-Castle collective cap came with a full-page color break on the front page of the Sunday Des Moines Register, with added inside column breaks.

Herald Ties With Cola Company To Sell 'My Reputation' in Boston

Elaborate heralds featuring color lithographs of Barbara Stanwyck, star of "My Reputation," will be displayed by 2,000 Royal Crown Cola dealers in Boston, in advance of the Warner film opening at the M. & P. Metropolitan Theatre February 21.

Part of the tieup includes the soft drink's three-dimensional wall ads in South and North Stations, which will feature the film's stars and the theatre's playdate. Lavish displays are also being set up in the Metropolitan lobby.

SHOWMAN SAM SAYS: They say our servicemen in Britain have been changing the English language, but that can work two ways if we see all the British pictures promised by the Messrs. Rank and Korda, what what, old toff?

Daily Promotional Bulletin for MGM Field Men and Theatres

A new service in the form of a daily bulletin, Promotional Flashes, which will go out daily to MGM's 34 field men, has been announced by William R. Ferguson, MGM director of exploitation. The new bulletin will give a daily account of promotional activities by the men as well as theatres keying their campaigns with MGM pictures.

In addition, all latest available information on sheet music, record and book tieups with publishers and stores, will go out as an addendum service with the Promotion Flashes.

'FREE OFFER' WINDOW. Lester Pollock, manager of Loew's Rochester Theatre, obtained this effective window display on a busy street simply by supplying the center piece to the store, which made it the focal center of the display offering free photos with the purchase of any frame in the window. An idea worth copying.

School Tieup Sells 'Wilson' for Turner

A tieup with local schools paved the way for the showing of 20th-Fox's "Wilson" at the Parsons Theatre, Parsons, Kansas. Manager Arthur Turner, who master-minded the overall exploitation campaign, arranged the tieup through cooperation of the superintendent of schools whereby announcements could be made in all city and rural schools on the film's playdate.

Students were urged by their teachers to see the picture, and were allowed to use its background as a basis of a book report, essay or theme, whichever the occasion required.

Three days in advance of the opening, 325 letters urging students and teachers to see the film because of its provocative theme, its noteworthy importance and timeliness, were mailed to the educators. As a result, several rural schoolmarms brought entire groups.

TORONTO

Film-company head-offices at Toronto are aroused over the action of the recently-appointed Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors in instituting drastic increases in fees for the examination of films and advertising accessories. The charge for film censoring has been raised from $3 to $6 per 1000 feet, while fees for advertising material have been jumped as much as 10 times more than the previous rates. The charge for examining a 24-sheet poster, for instance, is $1, compared with the previous 10 cents. It is feared in trade circles that censor boards in other Provinces may follow the Quebec example, thus adding considerably to distribution costs.

A la Carte Columbus Tent Style

Reuben's isn't the only institution, to name sandwiches after celebrities . . . the Columbus, Ohio, Variety Club's new Cook House, presided over by Leo Haenlein, veteran Barker and boss of Zoo Park, names its sandwiches after local showmen.

For instance. . .

There's the Leo Yassenoff designed sandwich—largest, juiciest, best filet mignon tenderloin ever built.

Or "Al Block chooses one that will electrify you . . . delicious and delectable . . . baked ham de luxe."

And "Floyd Gooding's Fun—a carnival of good eating . . . chopped sirloin steak."

To continue . . . "Harry Simons likes it even better than RKO. . . smoked tasty tender beef tongue from contented cattle . . . thrilling flavor."

There's more . . . "Bob Nelson Trick—there's magic in every bite . . . Liederkrantz cheese from Swiss goats that know how."

Or "Ben Almond Choo-Chooses a conducter's special trip of sliced tomato with sliced onion on crisp lettuce and salad dressing."

And we're told, for still another tidbit, that "Lou Holleb eats it—it's Majestic and tasty—much better than his show—Camembert cheese from Elsie herself."

And still another—"Art Robinson talks about this and you will broadcast it—fried ham with cheese or fried ham with egg."

These three conclude the mouth-watering Haenlein lineup:

"Jack Luft enjoys this Grand treat . . . every bite is a real delight—grilled crisp bacon with tomato, melted cheese and lettuce."

"Johnny Hardgrove taps and entertains you with a good showing of Philly cream cheese and jelly with crisp lettuce."

"Bill McKinnon broadcast a mouthful when he tells about black caviar on crisp lettuce with chopped onions."

cies in the story of the attacks and upon investigating discovers that the so-called leopards are men dressed in leopard skins and using iron claws on their victims. They have attacked to keep the white men from invading their territory. Tarzan's knowledge of the jungle enables him to clean up the danger.

Comment: This is modestly produced and is almost about on a par with previous Tarzan exploits but for the fact that the legendary jungle man's adventurous accomplishments have been drawn a little thin—and so is this story. Taking for granted, however, that the whole thing is just fantastic imagination, it can be enjoyed by the very young and viewed with tolerant amusement by the elders. Johnny Weismuller, Brenda Joyce and Johnny Sheffield do well enough but Acquanetta, sultry beauty though she is, should at least be coached in the rudiments of acting before being presented even as a queen of the leopard men, although certain of her charms evidently can be shown to good advantage as this character. As a whole, the film accomplishes its purpose—to entertain the youngsters. It is probable, however, that Mr. Lesser will have to require just a little bit more of possibility from his script writers in the future, because even the kids today can take only so much. Suitable for any double bill situation.

Rogue's Progress

Universal Drama 110 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Intriguing and original adventures of an unscrupulous playboy, played against colorful and varied backgrounds.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Better than average British offering for adult audiences, enhanced by an attractive performance from Rex Harrison.

Cast: Rex Harrison, Lilli Palmer, Griffith Jones, Margaret Johnson, Guy Middleton, Godfrey Tearle, Marie Lohr, Jean Kent and others. Credits: Written, conceived, produced and directed by Sidney Gilliat and Frank Launder. An individual production made at the Gainsborough Studios, London.

Plot: Harrison, unscruplous playboy son of an MP, is expelled from Oxford and because of his way of life keeps no job. After being cited in his best friend's divorce, he takes up motor racing and is in Vienna at the time of the Anschluss. Penniless and in debt, he sells himself in a loveless marriage with Lilli, an Austrian Jewess, to give her British nationality. She grows to love this likable rogue and attempts suicide when she sees him flirting with Margaret, his father's secretary who realizes his weaknesses and pities him. After a heavy drinking bout, he kills his father in a car crash. Shaken by this, he makes a genuine but unsuccessful effort to regenerate himself with Margaret's aid. He leaves her and becomes an equally carefree tank commander who meets his death in an enemy mine-field.

Comment: In their first independent production, Sidney Gilliant and Frank Launder have concentrated on making a really adult film and have pulled no punches. They have conceived an original and intriguing screenplay and though they might have verged on the sensational with this story of the enemy side, there is nothing cheap. They do not attempt a happy ending by whitewashing the scoundrel. Other than suggesting that he was a brave soldier, there are no heroics about his death. Like most British films, this could do with a little tightening up, for the producers have packed into it an incredible amount of incident and the colorful and ever-changing backgrounds include Oxford University, London, Vienna, South America and Cornwall. Rex Harrison, who is now playing the leading role in 20th-Fox's forthcoming "Anna and the King of Siam," is obvious star material. He is outstanding as the rogue who women will secretly admire and men will inwardly feel they could have equaled had they been the type. Rarely if ever has the ne'er-do-well been more brutally portrayed. The acting is excellent and Margaret Johnson, a West End stage actress, is an attractive newcomer who should go far. This is a better than average British offering, and with Harrison as an up-and-coming star should be a useful booking.

Deadline At Dawn

RKO Radio Mystery 83 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Good entertainment for most audiences, but especially for the more sophisticated. Children may find it too slow-moving and too thought-provoking for thorough enjoyment.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Needs intensive exploitation to obtain initial draw. Word of mouth should be favorable resulting in good prospects for later runs. Not strong enough to stand alone in the average situation.

Cast: Susan Hayward, Paul Lukas, Bill Williams, Joseph Calleia, Osa Massen, Lola Lane, Jerome Cowan, Marvin Miller, Roman Bohnen, Steven Geray, Joe Sawyer, Constance Worth, Joseph Crehan. Credits: Produced by Adrian Scott. Directed by Harold Clurman. Screenplay by Clifford Odets, based on a novel by William Irish. Photography, Nicholas Musuraca.

Plot: Bill Williams, naive young sailor on leave, sobers up to find himself the possessor of a large sum of money and a blank hour in his mind. Returning to the home of disreputable Lola Lane, the last place he can remember, he finds her strangled. Trying to orient himself he meets Susan Hayward, taxi dancer, and Paul Lukas, cab driver, who try to clear him before his deadline at dawn when he must return to his ship. Complications develop when evidence points toward several different characters, but Williams is cleared just before his deadline and he leaves with Susan for the town where his ship is berthed.

Comment: Production, direction, screenplay and excellent performances have been combined to concoct one of the better whodun-its. However, the picture has moments of fanciful situations that lack complete plausibility, marring in slight degree what might have been a superb picture. While Bill Williams' young sailor might conceivably be as dumb as he is portrayed here, and while Miss Hayward's part calls for her to be a hard-boiled, worldy-wise young lady, it just doesn't seem possible that these two would go into the kitchen of the apartment of a recently murdered woman in search for food and drink while the woman's body, not yet cold, lies sprawled on the living room floor. While minor faults such as this are permitted to creep in and intrude on the otherwise exciting mystery, the picture as a whole is top entertainment, sparked by Mr. Odets' inspired dialogue and the performances of Williams, Miss Hayward and particularly of Paul Lukas. Excellent bits in support are contributed by Joseph Calleia, Marvin Miller and Joseph Crehan. RKO has prepared an extensive press book, slanted along the lines it is believed will get the most out of this film. By following the lines set down in the press book and intensively attending to details the picture can be made into a better than average box office attraction, particularly in later runs when favorable word of mouth has had a chance to circulate. It is not strong enough, however, to stand alone in most situations.

Hit The Hay

Columbia Operatic Musical 62 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: Judy Canova goes operatic in a story all about rescuing a failing opera company.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Canova fans are legion, but they'll surely be in for a disappointment in this latest offering.

Cast: Judy Canova, Ross Hunter, Fortunio Bonanova, Doris Merrick, Gloria Holden, Grady Sutton, Louis Mason. Credits: Produced by Ted Richmond. Directed by Del Lord. Photography, James Van Trees.

Plot: When the civic opera company has financial difficulties which threaten to close its doors, the operators luckily discover a farm girl who can sing a mean aria. However, she can't act, and their project appears to be doomed. The girl, though a simple country lass, gets them to modernize opera and she appears in performances as herself, injecting humor and satire. It is a big success.

Comment: This is not a smart vehicle for hill-billy star Judy Canova. She doesn't quite succeed as a farm girl gone operatic, and a lot of Canova fans probably will voice their disapproval. The plot is too far-fetched, being too much of a strain upon even the most vivid imagination. Ross Hunter does okay as the young impresario who tries to retrieve the opera company's failing fortunes, and Doris Merrick screens well; however, the lines given the cast and the situations are so mediocre that the film must be relegated to the niche of efforts that didn't quite make it.

Live Wires

Mono. Drama 65 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) A new series with Leo Gorcey, Huntz Hall and the others, henceforth to be known as "The Bowery Boys." It's just what the fans want and will enjoy.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: A good beginning for the new series. Should do business wherever The Kids have a following.

Cast: Leo Gorcey, Huntz Hall, Bobby Jordan, Billy Benedict, William Frambes, Pamela Blake, Mike Mazurki, Claudia Drake, John Eldredge, Robert E. Keane, Patti Brill, Nancy Brinckman, Bill Christy, Earle Hodgins. Credits: Produced by Lindsley Parsons and Jan Grippo. Directed by Phil Karlson. Screenplay by Tim Ryan and Josef Mischel. Original story by Jeb Schary. Director of Photography, William Sickner.

Plot: The Bowery Boys undertake an assignment to serve summons on two gangsters whom the police are unable to apprehend. One of the boys poses as the henchman of an out-of-town killer, and gets into the crooks' hideout. There the situation gets desperate when the out-of-towner shows up to expose him, but his friends and the police rescue him and arrest the gangsters.

Comment: This latest Monogram series with Leo Gorcey, Huntz Hall, Bobby Jordan and Billy Benedict, henceforth to be known as "The Bowery Boys," is being produced by Lindsley Parsons and Jan Grippo. And they've done a good job with the first one "Live Wires," for not only does it contain all the by-play and antics that the fans enjoy, but the dialogue has more sparkle and grown-up appeal, which gives the picture more than the average amount of entertainment. Where the boys have a following and their pictures have done business before, this one will more than satisfy, not only their fans but many others. Gorcey and Hall carry most of the picture in their inimitable way, while Mike Mazurki as a ganster and Pamela Blake, Claudia Drake, Patti Brill and Nancy Brinckman help the funning along. Phil Karlson's direction gets the most out of the screwy situations, without letting the boys run wild.

CHECK-UP ON PRODUCT IN WORK

UNITED ARTISTS Behind Last Year's Shooting Tempo; Three Pictures Before the Cameras This Week; United Artists has ambitious plans for the future, but at present only three films are in production as compared to this week last year when six were being readied. "The Strange Woman," Hedy LaMarr starrer being produced by Hunt Stromberg; Charles R. Rogers' "Angel On My Shoulder," starring Paul Muni, Anne Baxter and Claude Rains; and "Mr. Ace and the Queen," Benedict Bogeaus production featuring George Raft and Sylvia Sidney are all rolling now.

Samuel Goldwyn is scheduled to start shooting next week on "Glory For Me," MacKinley Kantor novel adapted to the screen by Robert Sherwood. The stellar cast includes Frederic March, Myrna Loy, Teresa Wright, Dana Andrews and Cathy O'Donnell. Williams Wyler directs.

"A Scandal in Paris," Arnold Pressburger production starring George Sanders, Signe Hasso and Carole Landis, is being rushed to completion this month. Plans call for a world premiere on the island of Guam on March 10 before the entire Navy complement there. Special guest of honor will be Seaman First Class Gene Bottome, who will get his first glimpse at his three-year-old son, Michael, who appears briefly in the film. At this writing, scoring and editing chores are being wound up.

Comet Productions, to be co-produced by Buddy Rogers and Ralph Cohn, are casting now for their initial picture, "Little Iodine," to roll next month. Idea now is to build up a good stock company from relative unknowns.

Seymour Nebenzal's production crew leaves shortly for Florida and Havana to shoot background scenes for "The Chase."

Ben Hecht finished his script for "Dishonored Lady," to follow "Strange Woman." Edgar Ulmer has been signed to direct and Jack Chertok will produce. "Strange Woman" should finish in about a month.

Selznick's "Duel in the Sun" is having prologue bits added. The film has had a well sustained advertising campaign heralding its release.

RKO RADIO Maintains Shooting Record of Previous Year; Studio Sees Change in Leadership Because of Untimely Death of Charles Koerner—At a corresponding time last year, this studio had the highest number of pictures in production in Hollywood. At present, RKO is again high among studios in actual shooting performance. Five films are rolling at the studio proper, while Disney is finishing "Make Mine Music," to be released through RKO; and International is rolling "The Dark Mirror," for which no distributor has been officially announced, but which may come out through RKO.

"Make Mine Music," which will probably be finished at the end of February, is a part animation-part human feature, including such stars as Dinah Shore, Benny Goodman, The King's Men, Pied Pipers, Andy Russell, Jerry Colonna, Nelson Eddy, Lichine and Riabouchinswa and Spade Cooley and his orchestra. Disney plans to re-release "Fantasia" in April.

"Sinbad the Sailor" starts next week. Jane Greer has been added to the cast, which includes Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Maureen O'Hara and Walter Slezak.

Twelve-year-old Lanny Reese is now in the cast of "A Likely Story," most recent starter at the studio. Young Lanny has just been signed to a seven-year contract. In addition to this picture, others rolling are "Sister Kenny," "Crack Up," "Desirable Woman," and "Double Trouble."

Liberty Films, the latest independent added to the RKO roster, announced its first long-term player contract was given to David McKay, Broadway stage recruit. He will play James Stewart's brother in "It's A Wonderful Life." Frank Capra produces.

UNIVERSAL Slightly Behind in Production; Starting Dates Uncertain for Several Pictures—This organization was a bit more advanced in shooting last year, but the general trend today in all studios is a reduction in output. Most ambitious undertaking now is "Shahrazad," which has been rolling for six weeks. In Technicolor, this film stars Yvonne DeCarlo, Brian Donlevy, Jean Pierre Aumont and Eve Arden. "Love Takes a Holiday," with Joan Davis, Jack Oakie and Mischa Auer, starts its sixth week. "Dressed to Kill," formerly called "Design for Death," is being edited; and "Lost City of the Jungle," a serial, is also completed and is now in the editing phase.

Uncertain starting dates for several films make the immediate future indefinite, but it is more than likely that "Three Kids and a Queen," Marshal Grant production, will go before the cameras next week; Erle Kenton will direct. "Lessons in Love" may roll before the end of the month, also.

COLUMBIA Starts New Picture; Production Eases Off—"One Life Too Many" went before the lensmen last week, with John Sturges handling the directorial reins. Forrest Tucker stars, and Leslie Brooks takes care of the feminine lead. Production as a whole is lagging.

"The Story of Jolson" is receiving final production numbers, and will be moving into its 14th week of shooting. "The Devil's Mask" is rolling now, featuring Anita Louise in an adaptation of the radio program, "I Love A Mystery." "Hop Harrigan" serial finishes, following shooting of airplane hangar sets.

Actors are being tested by Director Alexander Hall for the male lead opposite Rita Hayworth in the forthcoming musical, "Down to Earth." Marc Platt is already set as the dancing lead, with Adele Jergens, Edward Everett Horton and Jimmy Gleason in supporting roles. The picture is scheduled for a March start.

Michel Kraike will produce "The Wreck of the Hesperus," from the famous Longfellow poem. Ted Richmond will produce a film adaptation of the play, "Becky Sharp"; Bennie F. Zeidman will supervise.

Allen Rivkin and Melvin Levy collaborate on the screenplay for "Rendezvous in Rio," extra-budget special starring Ann Miller. Latest additions to the cast are Veloz and Yolanda.

ber" and "Razor's Edge" Big Specials in Offing—This studio is still hitting on all fours when it comes to actual shooting. Just look at this setup: "Three Little Girls in Blue," "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim," "Anna and the King of Siam," "Cluny Brown," "It Shouldn't Happen to a Dog," and "Margie" are all rolling. In addition, "The Dark Corner" is being edited, having recently finished its stint before the cameras.

Most recent starter is "Margie." This film features Jeanne Crain, Alan Young, Glenn Langan, Lynn Bari and Hattie McDaniel. Very likely to finish shortly are "Three Little Girls in Blue," "Pilgrim" and "Anna and the King of Siam," all of which have been rolling over 11 weeks.

Somerset Maugham's "The Razor's Edge" is fast rounding into shape and can be expected to roll soon under the personal supervision of Darryl Zanuck.

REPUBLIC Gets Back on Its Production Feet; Yates Keeps Studio Going—Following threats by Herbert Yates, Republic president, to close the studio because of labor difficulties, this lot returned to normal. This week finds five pictures before the cameras, compared to one last week, and four this time last year.

"The Invisible Informer," starring Linda Stirling, Bill Henry and Adele Mara, finished its second week. "The Inner Circle," is closing its first week. Just started are "Man from Rainbow Valley," with Monte Hale and Adrian Booth; "The Ghost Goes Wild," with James Ellison, Anne Gwynne and Ruth Donnelly; and the latest Roy Rogers starrer, "My Pal, Trigger."

Gene Autry will make his first for Republic next month following a recent court ruling maintaining that Autry must make 21 films for the studio before being released from his pre-Army commitment.

"Traffic in Crime" is the latest story buy, and will be produced by Don H. Brown. Early production is scheduled for this action melodrama. Alan Dwan will produce "Heaven for Jenny," original novel to be published shortly by Simon and Schuster.

WARNER BROS. Far Behind in Shooting; Huge Backlog of Unreleased Films. With the completion of "Escape Me Never" and "Two Guys from Milwaukee," this studio is shooting only two films. They are "Humoresque" and "The Sentence." This same period last year, WB had seven films rolling. However, the fact that Warner's have such a huge backlog of pictures still to be released must be remembered.

"Stallion Road," Ronald Reagan-Alexis Smith vehicle, is expected to start within the next two weeks.

"Life With Father" is another picture planned to start before the end of the month. Irene Dunne and Bill Powell co-star.

MONOGRAM Is Slowing Up on Production; Several Pictures Being Edited—"In High Gear," latest Bowery Boy production, is the only film before the cameras at this studio. "Code of the Drifter," Johnny Mack Brown Western, has been changed to "Under Arizona Skies," and is being readied for national release. Another picture getting a final editing check is "The Shadow's Shadow," second in that series.

King Brothers received a setback in plans for their forthcoming special, "The Hunted," to star Belita. The English skating champion was rushed to a hospital in New York with pneumonia, contracted on a flight from London.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER Behind Last Year's Shooting; "Showoff" Gets Started Nine films were in production this time last year at MGM, but this week finds only three rolling, with one just finishing and starting its editing phase. "Fiesta," filmed in Mexico, is practically completed, and has been brought up for the beginning of editing.

"Till the Clouds Roll By" moves into its seventh week. "You Were There," Hepburn-Taylor starrer, just completed its first week before the cameras. Most recent starter is "The Showoff," Red Skelton's vehicle that will bring him back to the screen following his service in the Army.

A Technicolor camera crew is filming preliminary and background shots on Mackinac Island in the Great Lakes area for the forthcoming musical, "This Time for Keeps."

Mrs. Showman Goes To Hollywood

Dear Mr. Exhibitor's Wire:

Today we're going to meet Francis Xavier Aloysius James Jeremiah Keenan Wynn, (just Keenan Wynn to you; honest to goodness, that's his real name) and Frank Morgan and Audrey Totter. All are working in the MGM picture, "But Not Goodbye."

Of all places, we're going to meet them in a barn, where today's scene takes place. This is one of the sequences in which Morgan and Wynn (his son), come back to earth to try and straighten out the love affair of Audrey and Richard Quine, and the messed-up family affairs Morgan left behind when he passed on.

We find Audrey in her dressing room attired in a blanket which reveals part of a petticoat on one side. And she tells us that her costume has been named a "Sarobe," probably because it is the next step to a little more clothes than a sarong.

This is the costume she wears in the next scene, for in the previous one she had to come through the rain from the house to the barn. She got so wet (they kept dousing her with water as they rehearsed the scene over and over again) that she was forced to change into the blanket, which the script also called for.

We learn all of this as we visit with her, but our visit ends abruptly when she is called out by the director. Then we amble over to call on Wynn, who looks very early Americanish in a formal morning suit with a cutaway coat, a high hat and a cane. Kidding immediately starts about his long name, and we find ourselves tremendously entertained by his explanation, before he too is called "on set."

This means the director, S. Sylvan Simon, is all ready to shoot, so we hasten to watch as Audrey and Quine take their places on a bale of hay and Wynn and Morgan stand in position right behind them.

Action starts with Audrey trying to make Quine declare his love for her, while the two invisible spirits hang over their shoulders practically putting words in Quine's mouth.

It turns out to be a very difficult, though funny, sequence and everyone is greatly amused, except perhaps the director, who calls for many rehearsals before he gets everything to click.

When he's satisfied, it's time for us to leave, so we bid adieu to Francis Xavier Aloysius James Jeremiah Keenan Wynn, Audrey, Quine, Morgan and the others, and go on our way.

Until next week.

This is the picturization of the life of John J. Montgomery, first man to fly a heavier-than-air craft in controlled operation.

De Haven, who holds the Presidential Citation, Silver Star and other decorations, was signed to a long-term contract by Columbia while still in the service.

Paramount Will Launch a New Cartoon Technique in Sept.

54-54 for Alan Hale

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

The Scarlet Horseman (Good)

Universal Chapter Play (1781-1793) 20-25 mins.

The first two chapters of "The Scarlet Horseman" reveal action of a high degree, an exciting story and good characterizations, indicating that Universal has come up with a better class serial which should please the youngsters no end. The Scarlet Horseman is in reality a government agent who assumed the character to gain control over the Indians who have been convinced by renegade white men that they should abandon their peaceful ways and attack wagon trains. The renegade whites have discovered that the territory they wish the Indians to hold for them is rich in gold and other resources. The cast includes Paul Guilfoyle, Peter Cookson, Virginia Christine, Victoria Horne, Danny Morton, Fred Coby, Janet Shaw, Jack Ingram, Edward M. Howard, Ralph Lewis, Edmund Cobb, Cy Kendall. The original screenplay is by Joseph O'Donnell, Tom Gibson and Patricia Harper. Directed by Ray Taylor and Lewis D. Collins. Produced by Morgan B. Cox. Photography, Jerome Ash and George Robinson.

RKO Radio (63,403) Edgar Kennedy 18 mins.

Kennedy gets himself into a financial jam by listening to his brother-in-law's system to beat the horse races. Trying to borrow enough money to pay off his losses he invites a banker to his house for dinner and the banker entrusts his valuable watch to Kennedy's care. The watch is dropped into an ice cream freezer and various parts appear during the dinner. Better than most of the Kennedy shorts.

Great Lakes (Excellent)

RKO Radio (63,103) This Is America 16 mins.

This is a comprehensive visual explanation of the Great Lakes and their invaluable use by America as the arteries of transportation which supply coal, iron, lumber and foodstuffs from the industrial middle west to all parts of the world. It shows the various locks, the sources of supply of raw materials, their transportation and the processing of these materials. Filmed with the cooperation of the U. S. Coast Guard which supervises and polices the waterways, "Great Lakes" is an intensely interesting short, dramatic, inspirational and rich in entertainment.

Para. (J5-2) 10 mins.

This latest in the Popular Science series rings the bell for interesting items and pure entertainment. The opening sequence shows the electrically-heated blankets used for casualties during the war and soon to be available to civilians. Then comes potato harvesting with various contrivances that plant, pick and pack the potatoes. Finally, there is shown the Institutum Divi Thomae's invasion of the jungle to find the Indian cure for malaria, and their efforts to prepare the jungle roots scientifically for use by the modern world.

Unusual Occupations (Interesting)

Para. (L5-1) 10 mins.

The latest in the Jerry Fairbanks series is in keeping with its interesting slant on unusual people with unusual jobs. Sequences include: a hat designer who makes creations for milady out of matches, kitchenware and cigaretts; a novel birdhouse builder; horses pulling nets in the Columbia River to catch spawning salmon; a Hollywood studio employe building intricate, animated miniature western sets; and the concluding sequence showing a California hobbyist who owns an amazing collection of cars circa 1900, some of which he can still drive.

Naughty Nanette (Entertaining)

Para. (FF5-2) Musical Parade 20 mins.

Combining some very light foot-tapping music, with lyrics sung by popular Bob Graham and talented Dorothy Porter, this musical parade, all wrapped up in Technicolor, makes an extremely entertaining short. Story concerns two cute French sisters living in Canada who are both out to get the same Mountie. Nanette, the younger, doesn't seem to be doing too well until she puts on her mother's wedding dress and then gets her man. Scenes are colorful. The subject is good for any type of audience.

Apple Andy (Good)

Univ. Andy Panda Cartoon 7 Mins.

Andy Panda, walking down a Technicolor country lane, is tempted to steal an apple or two, and a conflict develops between the Devil and Andy's conscience. Andy helps himself to plenty of apples but they are green and the inevitable stomach ache results, sending him into a series of nightmares. The better self wins out in the end, however, sending the Devil to H—pardon, where he belongs.

CURRENT OBSERVATIONS

THAR SHE BLOWS. The rash of municipal and state tax invasions of the theatre box-office spreads across the land. New York got it this week.

In New York, as elsewhere, it is upon the little theatres that the burden falls most heavily in these tax cases. The big houses have been enjoying their share of good business. Also, they have been having their share of increases in admission scales. Not so the smaller operations.

The irony of it is that the theatre interests face a rather embarrassing situation in these cases. If politicians argue that there has been such advance in admissions that the theatres can afford to absorb a tax, they are using as illustration the privileged few big theatres which actually have had substantial increases in attendance as well as substantial boosts in price scales. But nothing is said of—nor very much done for—the more numerous theatres in the more modest classifications as to size, patronage and admission scales.

NOT TOO LATE. While there has been altogether too much dawdling on the part of exhibitor organizations for a vigorous program of defense against these advancing tax forays by the municipalities and states in efforts to raise added revenue, there is still time to do something forward-looking and constructive toward a good united front for the exhibition branch of this industry. Currently, the most promising program appears to be that which is being formulated by the Theatre Activities Committee.

If other organizations have the disposition and the ability to do a good job of organizing for intelligent effort to combat the encroaching tax moves, then let them now come forward with something concrete and specific as to contemplated policy and program.

UNIQUE IDEA. The industry is watching with great interest for developments arising from the new, very unique policy, announced in New York by MGM's Bill Rodgers for an extension of the sales force activities into the field of more active cooperation with exhibitor customers in exploiting the MGM films.

Rodgers, at the conclusion of a series of sales meetings, said that the meetings had served as a "refresher course" for MGM exploiteers attending and also as an "educational session" for the company's salesmen in the methods to be used in promoting MGM films in their territories. It was indicated that there would be an increasing tie between the salesmen of the company and their theatre accounts through active interest in exploitation. And it was indicated that the plan will call for MGM salesmen to aid the company's field exploiteers as well as to act independently in giving assistance to exhibitors playing MGM pictures. One of the means being taken to effect this greater cooperation and facility on the part of MGM salesmen in showmanship assistance, was to take the form of periodic meetings between the salesmen and the exploiteers to discuss exploitation methods recommended for application to local campaigns of MGM films soon to be released.

An extension of that policy along lines of constructive work for the general good of movie attendance at theatres everywhere in the country can do a great deal for the industry as a whole.

GOOD ADVICE. Leo Wolcott, president of Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa-Nebraska, urges members of his organization to "rebuild or repair, renovate and redecorate," in a bulletin issued last week from his headquarters in Eldora, Iowa.

Nothing could be more to the point, right now, than for the theatre owner to make immediate plans to rehabilitate his property. "Many theatres," says Wolcott, "are badly run-down, dirty, equipment bad." That is too true. Many theatres in a down-at-the-heels condition are so through no active fault of the owners—materials are still scarce.

However, the good business which is nolding up in key situations throughout the country—according to reports this week—will further intensify the interest of men with capital to invest, and theatremen can look for keen competition, not only from forms of amusement which were banned during the war, but from new enterprises in their own field of picture theatre operation.

As pointed out repeatedly in this journal, the most effective means of fending off competition, of preventing an over-seated situation from developing right under your nose, is to pep up your shows and your showmanship and put your theatre in tip-top shape so that there will be no desire on the part of newcomers to enter the lists in competition with you.

TAC Not Limiting Delegates

No limit on the number of delegates from each state who may attend the organizational meeting of the Theatre Activities Committee in St. Louis April 1-2 has been set, but the final organizational procedure at the convention will determine whether each state will have one vote or whether voting power will be based on a state's population, informed sources said in New York this week.

At present there is said to be some division of thought as to which method will be selected, but TAC reportedly wants to get as many exhibitors as possible to the organizational meeting and is inviting exhibitors to attend whether selected as delegates or not. These non-delegate exhibitors will be invited to all sessions and are expected to participate in all discussions.

The TAC meeting, which will be held in the Chase Hotel, is to give a permanent form to the temporary committee which is now operating under the presidency of Si Fabian and which is at present financed through loans by its principal sponsors.

Say Higher Taxes May Make Movies Luxury Entertainment

New York City Plan for 5% Impost Unlikely to Face Strong United Opposition

Fear that if city taxes on amusements continues to spread the motion picture might be forced out of its position as entertainment for the masses due to tax costs alone, seemed to be mounting throughout the nation this week as there appeared little hope in New York of effective action or a united front on the part of all theatres against Mayor O'Dwyer's contemplated city amusement tax of five per cent.

Observers pointed out that since there already is 20 per cent federal tax to be met, in most situations throughout the country motion picture theatres have not much edge to take on increased tax burdens. They added that the city amusement tax has spread with too much rapidity in some sections where it did not seem to be needed as badly as the tax proponents argued, and pointed to the south where the tax went into effect in Mobile, Ala. and soon spread to other southern cities.

Meanwhile in New York the only exhibitor unit to come out with a definitive stand and a program during the week was the Unaffiliated Independent Exhibitors.

UIE President Jesse Stern expressed opposition to the tax, said his organization would work with any other theatre organizations opposing it, but added that if it were decided a tax was actually needed in New York, it should start on admissions over 50 cents.

The Independent Theatre Owners Association was to have a meeting at which the tax matter might come up, an IOTA spokesman said. The League of New York Theatres, which represents the legitimate theatre interests reportedly met Wednesday afternoon but lacked a quorum.

Stern of Unaffiliated said he planned to wire Mayor O'Dwyer his organization's protest. Informed of this, the Mayor's press secretaries said the wire had not yet been received and that the Mayor would not comment.

To SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW Stern said:

"So far as the Unaffiliated Independent Exhibitors are concerned, we have a direct opposition to any increased taxes on theatres and amusements. We feel that any tax would almost amount to an undue hardship in view of the fact that we also have a 20 per cent federal tax.

"We are anxious to cooperate with any organization in the theatrical or motion picture industry that is in opposition to the new tax. However, in the event it can be shown that a new tax is absolutely necessary, we believe that it should be imposed only on admissions of 50 cents and upward. Otherwise it would deprive the lower economic groups of their right to enjoy the motion picture, particularly children whose general admissions are not over 20 cents."

Stern's wish to get a combined effort against the tax from all theatrical interests bogged down as far as the League of New York Theatres was concerned in his views on necessary taxes on admissions of 50 cents and up.

James F. Reilly, executive secretary of the League, which represents the already heavily taxed New York legitimate theatres, said however that his organization would work with any motion picture organization which opposed the proposed city tax in its entirety. Stern's concession to a tax on admissions of 50 cents and over, Reilly pointed out, would protect only a certain group of motion picture exhibitors and would leave the legitimate theatre to face the tax.

Approve Plan to Increase 'U' Capital

Approval of a plan to increase the authorized capital of Universal Pictures Company, Inc., was voted at a special meeting held this week in Wilmington, Delaware. The increase will be made by adding 100,000 shares of cumulative preferred stock, par value $100 a share. The company's present capitalization consists of 2,000,000 shares of common stock authorized, of which 814,430 shares were outstanding on January 25, 1946.

Protests Bring Cuts in Quebec Censorship Costs

Protests by showmen of the Quebec area have resulted in the government's decision to lower censorship costs. The censor board is going over the situation now. This board has also made progress in cutting down the backlog of film waiting to be censored.

Business in South Up to Wartime Peak, Says Levy

With the exception of areas which depended upon military camps for a boom, business in general throughout the south is equal to any time during the war period, Nat Levy of RKO, who just returned to New York from a swing through Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Georgia told SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW this week.

"I believe," Levy said, speaking of all business, "that it will hold up well. There is an anticipated building of theatres in most areas. I guess the only thing holding it back is lack of material. In a few years I think there is going to be a lot of theatre building.

"Business is as good as it has been in years—outside of the places which depended on soldiers. General business is as good if not better than usual."

Levy found that Saturday night in most of the smaller communities was still a Western night but declined to comment upon picture tastes in the south. He pointed out that "Bells of St. Mary's" which is off the beaten track, was the biggest grosser of any RKO picture to play those areas. "Spanish Main" is another heavy grosser, he said.

Altec Conference Series Opens in Kansas City

Second in a series of Altec Service Corporation Conferences between home office executives, district, branch managers and supervisors is now under way at the Phillips Hotel in Kansas City, Mo.

Among the discussion held were talks on improved service, customer and dealer contacts and general policy. New equipment is also being demonstrated.

"The Voice of the Theatre," Altec Lansing's new loudspeaker, had an important place on the program.

William J. Heineman

(The Man on the Cover)

Vice-president and general sales manager of United World Pictures, Inc., a post he assumed this week and for which a wide experience in distribution gives him special qualification to fill. Mr. Heineman resigned from Samuel Goldwyn Productions last week to take over his present duties with United World. He made his entry in the film industry 27 years ago with Pathe in Seattle, Washington. Soon thereafter he was made manager of the First National office in that city. Heineman then opened his own independent distribution office in Butte, but returned to the major field again in 1925 with Universal in San Francisco. He was assistant general sales manager for Universal with headquarters in the home offices at the time he joined Goldwyn several years ago.

Leo's Roar Heard

MGM's "Leo the Lion" is the most popular trade-mark in the motion picture industry according to a research study conducted by Leo Handel's Motion Picture Research Bureau.

The bureau reports that the MGM trade-mark was dominant in all locations in which the nationwide survey was made. A comparison with an identical study conducted in 1942 shows that "Leo" increased his lead considerably.

Another interesting detail revealed by the study is the fact that men are much more "trade-mark conscious" than women.

1st Quarter Profit Seen At WB Stockholders Meet

Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., stand to show a substantial profit increase for the three months ending March 2, 1946 over the corresponding quarter of last year, a representative of the company said at the annual stockholders' meeting held this week in Wilmington, Del.

The stockholders reelected the following directors whose terms expire this year: John E. Bierwirth, Waddill Catchings, Robert W. Perkins, Major Albert Warner, Harry M. Warner and Jack L. Warner.

Upon a motion made by I. Emmanuel Sauder of Philadelphia, seconded by Frank J. Reilly of Wilmington, a vote of confidence and appreciation was unanimously accorded the management.

Officers of the corporation who attended the meeting included Samuel Carlisle, comptroller and director; W. Steward McDonald, assistant treasurer; Harold S. Bareford, Edward K. Hessberg, assistant secretaries, and Thomas J. Martin, auditor.

WB Breach of Trust Suit Against Cooper

Claiming a breach of trust, Warner Bros., Wednesday, filed a suit in the United States District Court at Oklahoma City, asking that a lease granted J. H. Cooper, manager of Standard Theatres, be nullified.

Cooper, who was affiliated with Warners and Paramount in the Standard Theatres' operation, is claimed in the suit to have acted in bad faith by forming the Cooper Foundation of Nebraska and then securing a lease on the Liberty Theatre, which is now operated in the Standard-Warner- Paramount set up. The Liberty is a dual-run house in the commercial section.

Paramount Conferences Shift to Home Offices

Paramount President Barney Balaban and George Weltner, who heads Paramount International, returned to New York this week after visiting the coast for conferences with studio executives. Other conferences going on at the crossroads of the world building in Times Square are those Charles Reagan, vice-president in charge of distribution, is holding with his division managers, Bill Erbb, Hugh Owen, James J. Donohue and George Smith. Oscar Morgan, short subjects and newsreel sales chief, is sitting in at the conference.

Rank's Production Aide Here

Filippo Del Giudice, production chief for Two Cities Films, one of the two main film outlets of J. Arthur Rank, this week arrived in New York after a month's visit in Hollywood. It was the first trip of the Londoner to this side.

March 4 Election May Bring Studio-Union Strife Solution

Hollywood—and those who watch labor developments the world over—have their eyes set on March 4 to see which of the involved labor factions in the film capital will win the right to bargain for some 3500 movie extras.

On that day the National Labor Relations Board will hold an election to allow extras to determine whether they are to be represented by the Screen Actors' Guild or the Screen Players' Union.

Actually this particular election will settle only one phase of a many-sided jurisdiction and ideological labor difficulty, since these unions are but two of the more than 16 unions which have lined up into two camps—that which roughly lines along with the backing of the Los Angeles Central Labor Council, and that which lines up with the Conference of Studio Unions, headed by Herbert K. Sorrell.

Backed by Sorrell

The Screen Players' Union is backed by Sorrell. The Screen Actors' Guild is backed by the powerful International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and is one of the eight unions which have served notice on the industry in general and Sorrell in particular that they will carry out their work contract and go to work even if the Conference of Studio Unions called a strike.

This amazing picture of labor at odds with labor is more easy to understand by reviewing the confused labor situation in Hollywood.

Back in 1945 the Sorrell Conference of Studio Workers called a 34-week strike in a jurisdictional battle with other American Federation of Labor unions. The strike was tough. Picket lines saw action.

Old line AFL unions claimed Sorrell was trying to crash into their jurisdiction. Sorrell, who has unions of painters, carpenters, machinists, electricians, sheet metal workers, blacksmiths, molders and plumbers, in his Conference of Studio Workers, reportedly retorted that the old line unions, sympathizing with the IATSE, were trying to freeze him out.

Whatever the truth of either side's charges and counter charges, the fact remains that jurisdictional fights can arise easily in an industry where so many crafts which could do each other's work overlap. The work of stage carpenters and studio carpenters is a case in point.

The AFL in turn is behind eight powerful unions whose aggregate membership is around 25,000 against Sorrell's estimated 6,000 members. These include the four strong IATSE unions, the American Federation of Musicians, the Screen Actors' Guild, the Screen Extras' Guild (which has the backing of AAAA President Paul Dullzell), the Studio Plasterers, Studio Utility Employes, the Studio Drivers (which is affiliated with the powerful Teamsters' Brotherhood), and the Culinary Workers.

Realizing the gravity of the jurisdictional situation, the AFL issued an order which is more or less interpreted as backing the IATSE. Sorrell went to the meeting of the AFL in Miami to protest. A committee reportedly studied his complaint but stood by its original decision.

The IATSE claims the decision is very clear. Sorrell claims it needs clearing and has asked for clarification.

Apparently therefore the only sore spot between the two labor bodies should be who will represent the screen extras, and that apparently should be cleared up by the March 4 election.

But the matter goes deeper than that, observers say. There is still a conflict in jurisdictions which is honestly made. There is also the feeling the CSU must harbor when the eight AFL unions said they would go to work anyway if the CSU called a strike.

Sorrell claims that the present trouble which is involving the producers is not one of jurisdiction and points to the fact that he is trying to get higher wages for his unions. It is on this ground that a committee consisting of himself, Les Sanders of the electricians, and Jimmie Skelton of the carpenters, is meeting with the producers committee consisting of B. B. Kahane of Columbia, E. J. Mannix of MGM, Y. Frank Freeman of Paramount, and MPPA Vice-President Byron Price who used to censor the news during the war and before that was an Associated Press top man.

Sorrell generally wants the studios to keep the same wages but cut the working week to 36 hours instead of 48. Studio heads say this means about a 50 per cent increase since with a 36 hour week overtime would start after the 36 hours. Sorrell is also seeking pay raises for the studio office employes, but the studios claim that his union is no longer the proper bargaining agent so another national labor board election may loom there.

In their effort to show that top wages were paid in the studios, the studio committee released figures that show carpenters, painters and sheet metal workers connected with the film industry get $1.80 an hour against $1.50 an hour paid outside of the studios in Los Angeles. That machinists got $1.80 an hour in the studios while those outside got about $1.34.

Indulge in Name-Calling

The situation is further complicated by the fact that both sides have been indulging in a bit of name calling. Some speakers for the AFL groups have been called the CSU Communist-dominated. Some speakers for the CSU have been throwing the term "fascist" at the AFL leadership.

Sorrell, who has displayed considerable courage in his fight is now attempting to get a contempt of court jail sentence imposed on him thrown out. He was sentenced to 16 days on Jan. 7 apparently for ignoring an order about mass picketing around the Warner Bros. studios. Sorrell claims the injunction was illegal and is out on a habeas corpus on it, while the case is being argued.

Meanwhile the film industry is threatened with the possibility of another strike. What effect it will have on the production of films is not considered very serious at the moment even though the studios have said they will close down if a strike is called. Most companies have enough product to coast along for a period.

But the necessity of clarifying labor jurisdictions and other labor problems, publicly stated by MPAA President Eric Johnston, remains.

Schwalberg Joins UWP As Assistant Sales Head

Alfred W. Schwalberg this week was appointed assistant general sales manager of United World Pictures, Inc., according to an announcement by the company's president, William J. Heineman.

Schwalberg entered the motion picture industry with Warner Bros. in 1925 as traveling auditor. When that company took over First National in 1928, he became head of the contract department under Ned Depinet and in 1943 rose to the position of vice-president in charge of operations. In May 1944, he joined International Pictures as general sales manager.

Schwalberg, who is to assume his duties immediately with Wide World, will be elected a vice-president, Heineman said.

Wolcott Hits Moveovers, Extended First Runs

Opposition to extended first-runs and moveovers by producer-affiliated theatre circuits was voiced this week by Leo F. Wolcott of Eldora, president of the Allied Independent Theatre Owners of Iowa-Nebraska, who claimed the extended runs added to the problem of picture shortage.

Wolcott also came out strongly in opposition to producer-distributors allowing the reduction of their products to 16-mm. for showing in the country; distributors licensing their products for use by the so-called "jack-rabbits" or portable circuits; forcing licensing of foreign-made pictures with American-made pictures; and distributors allowing affiliated theatres to show two "A" pictures on one double bill.

Discussing the double "A" pictures, Wolcott said that if the affiliated theatres are allowed to show two on one bill, they should also license these pictures to the independents on such terms as will allow the independents to meet the competition.

He also stated "we are opposed to the practice indulged in by some of the distributors of flatly refusing (sometimes using the old print shortage gag) to release and date pictures to independents until they have played the affiliated circuits."

Sees Glimmer of Hope In Censor Situation

A ray of hope for the eventual success of realistic pictures in their fight against censorship was seen in Atlanta last week by Walter Wanger before he enplaned for Hollywood.

Wanger, who came out on the losing end of a tight fight to get an adverse censorship ban against "Scarlet Street" lifted, cited the fact that only three members of the board had backed City Censor Christine Smith in her ban and that it was only when the board chairman cast a vote that the tie resulted.

"I am particularly gratified by the fact that half the board, after seeing the picture courageously voted in its favor. . . . It is significant that only three members of the board voted to sustain the ban. Four voted against it. The Chairman, Mr. Milam, then cast the tying vote. "This is clearly not a vote to sustain the censor," said Wanger.

Chief among pictures preparing for showing are "Brief Encounter," "Men of Two Worlds," "Beware of Pity," "A Matter of Life and Death," "Caravan," "The Years Between" and "The Captive Heart." Set for production are "Odd Man Out," "Green for Danger," "The Gay Galliard," "The Small Back Room," "The Dandy" and "Digger's Republic."

Wolfe Cohen, vice-president of Warner International, left New York on Tuesday by plane on the first lap of a five-month inspection tour that will take him to London, Cairo, Bombay, Calcutta, Singapore, Shanghai and other eastern markets.

Noiseless Sack for Popcorn Gulpers

Science is wonderful, as Paragrapher Clyde Moore of the Ohio State Journal (Columbus) admits, but he has a simpler method for dealing with noisy popcorn eaters in theatres than even his own proposed development of a noiseless sack.

Says Paragrapher Moore:

"The Battelle Institute is always solving problems for the benefit of mankind and we wonder if some of the experts up there would mind devoting a few hours to devising a noiseless sack for the use of popcorn gulpers at movie theatres.

"If this problem seems too difficult, we will settle for a small noiseless hammer, which can be parked under each seat and used whenever needed to lull the noisy feeders into a state of unconsciousness."

Long-Run Singles on Upgrade in Columbus

The anticipated postwar box-office slump, feared by some theatremen, has not yet put in an appearance in Columbus, Ohio, as far as the downtown first runs are concerned. On the contrary, the four first-run theatres—RKO Palace, RKO Grand, Loew's Ohio and Loew's Broad—have been having a succession of holdovers and extended runs since the first of the year.

Champion long-run picture since the start of the new year was "The Bells of St. Mary's" which clanged away merrily for 25 days at the Palace and Grand. "Spellbound" was around a total of three weeks at the Ohio and Broad, being one of the few films ever to achieve a second week at the Ohio. "Leave Her to Heaven" scored an 18-day stay at the Palace and Grand and "They Were Expendable" was shown for 17 days at the Ohio and Broad. "The Lost Weekend" moved into the Ohio's select circle by doing two weeks.

It's notable that in each case the films were shown as single features, a policy which seems to be meeting with increased favor among local downtown theatre patrons.

Donahue-Coe Establishes Theatre Adv. Department

Donahue and Coe, national advertising agency with headquarters in New York set up a special theatre department this week with offices to be on the 25th floor of the RKO Building.

This new set up, which will be under the direction of Lloyd Seidman, agency vice-president and account executive for Republic Pictures, the Center, Astor, Rialto, Criterion, Rivoli, will coordinate the advertising activities of over 100 New York theatres. With Seidman will be Jack Murray, who handled the Capitol Theatre; Bill Kerman of Loew's Movie Guide; Fred Lynch and Nancy Wheeler, of the Radio City Music Hall; Mary Duffy, account executive of the Skouras Theatres; Julian Bass, James Washer, Harold Churchill and Howard Duncan, assistant account executives. Alan T. Bogart will head the art staff.

Dimes Marching On

Total collections of the industry's 1946 March of Dimes may equal and possibly top the record of $5,978,939 raised in 1945, reports received at national headquarters in New York this week indicate.

Loew's Circuit, which annually accounts for nine and a half to ten per cent of the national collections, reports $584,608, an increase of $12,000, while RKO Theatres nationally collected $272,581 as compared with $232,901 last year.

Individually, Loew's Capitol Theatre, Washington, with $28,292 and the Radio City Music Hall, New York, with $27,238, are ahead of last year.

Crime Wave Rampant In Montreal Theatres

Crime continues to take the spotlight in Montreal theatre circles, with several theatre managers and cinemas the focal point in news stories. In a similar raid to that staged at the Palace some weeks ago, gunmen struck in the early morning and escaped from the Francais with $7,000 representing the weekend receipts. Two men entered the house at 6 a.m., forced Nicholas Nationale, aged caretaker and Yvon Lambert, his young assistant, to lie on the floor. They smashed the safe and made their getaway. The Palace got taken in an early morning sortie by six gunmen for $8,000.

William Wright, of the Rialto and Albert Blondin, of the Corona were leaving for home one morning last week and ran into three bandits engaged in a smash-and-grab raid on a jewelry shop near the theatres. They boarded a passing taxi and chased the thugs for several blocks. One man was caught and jewelry was scattered all along Park and Mount Royal Avenues. The other two escaped.

Toronto Service Shows Terminate Late in March

Toronto's free Sunday afternoon shows for men and women in uniform are due to pass out by the end of March, reliable Canadian sources said this week.

The shows, presented without cost to the Dominion government, were born of wartime conditions and were presented by Toronto's four leading theatres. Since V-J Day, however, attendance has dropped to about 700 people and theatres feel that the Sunday matinees are no longer needed. When they were at first suggested to take care of the hosts of uniformed men and women during the war, moral reformers objected on grounds that they violated the Sunday closing law.

Goldenson Concludes Tour

Leonard Goldenson, Paramount vice-president in charge of theatre operations; Edward L. Hyman, theatre department executive and Walter Gross of the legal department have returned to the home office following a business swing around the country that took them to the coast, Dallas, Kansas City, Memphis and Chicago.

Walter Branson, RKO Radio western division sales manager, left over the weekend for St. Louis to join Dave Prince, captain of the Ned Depinet Drive, on the second phase of the campaign. Nat Levy, RKO Radio eastern division sales manager, returned Monday after a three week's tour of the company's southern exchanges. He is scheduled to join Prince in Detroit on February 27.

Allied Presents Plan to Eliminate Checking

The skeleton of a plan which it is said advocates abandoning theatre checkers in favor of bonding theatres and providing a regular periodic audit of their books, was submitted to distributors in New York this week by Col. H. A. Cole on behalf of the Allied States Association.

Col. Cole would not comment on the long expected Allied plan beyond acknowledging that it had been sent out. No comments came from distributors either though reliable sources indicated that the plan reportedly was largely in the nature of an outline which might be intended to open further conversations on the subject.

In declining to reveal the plan, Col. Cole said: "The Board told us to submit it and give the distributors sufficient time to answer."

For that reason, he said, he would not comment further.

Lobby Collection Box Aids Stamps for Wounded Drive

Stamps for the Wounded, a campaign currently being conducted by philatelists throughout the nation to provide postage stamps for hospitalized servicemen "to take their minds off white ceilings and black futures," received added impetus recently when the Baldwin, L. Collection boxes in theatre lobbies is one of the most effective means by which Stamps for the Wounded can amass sufficient stamps to supply the wounded servicemen, according to Ernest A. Kehr, national chairman who expressed the hope that other theatres would make collection boxes available for patrons' stamp contributions.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

SCREEN ADVERTISING—BANE OR BOON?

By Jack Jackson

Following up detailed information about candy and popcorn merchandising as an added source of theatre revenue, here's the complete outline of that most controversial of all "additional income" items—screen advertisements. The subject, as theatremen will find in reading this highly informative article, is treated in a wholly detached fashion and in a way that gives all the facts for your own determination as to whether screen advertising is to be avoided like a plague or something to be embraced as a necessary income asset.

In a recent article I tried to give you a bank's-eye view of concession stand operation and to chronicle the modus operandi of successfully conducting one of these "penny-nickel-dime" mines.

There is another excellent manner of adding materially to theatre revenue, the adoption or rejection of which has been a moot question among big and little theatre operators everywhere for many, many years.

Screen advertising has been cussed and discussed so exhaustively that I, being of frail physique and totally lacking in temerity, will attempt to avoid the melee by simply starting a fire of facts, as I have been able to determine them, and grabbing a safe seat on the sidelines to watch the cauldron boil and the scalding soup ladled out according to each man's desire.

Let's measure the hurdles and examine the pitfalls first.

The outstanding objection to screen advertising is usually registered by the local newspapers who, for some unknown reason, seem content to accept outdoor billboards, sandwich men, barkers, loud speakers and other means of attracting public attention to the wares of various merchants the while they cry like stuck pigs about advertising on theatre screens. The usual argument is that screen advertising takes money that merchants would spend in the display columns of the paper if they were denied the use of theatre screens. And, the penalty for ignoring their complaint is a reduction in publicity lineage and art. Why similar action is not taken against auctioneers and other merchants resorting to media other than the newspaper to market their wares is and always has been an enigma to me. However, opposition from this quarter has been widespread and so it deserves profound consideration.

Objections Can Be Overcome

"Ads on the screen are obnoxious to patrons." That remark is frequently made by proficient theatremen and possesses considerable validity, in cases where the showman has no control over the kind, length, number, etc. of ads to be shown.

"The revenue is too small to compensate for the effort and headache," is another frequent statement.

"The content of the pictorial display and accompanying dialogue are not a fair picture of the advertiser and his business."

"The ads become tiresome and interfere with the attention given the trailers on coming attractions."

"Conflicting business ads," "too many ads," "quality and quantity of ads."

All of the above are valid objections to screen advertising but each in its turn has been answered by theatremen who do use the screen advertising and who claim all such objections can be overcome if the exhibitor gives thorough study to the overall picture and makes his own rules as to number, length, quality, etc., and by proper program construction to spot the ads in the right places.

The one objection which has not been answered, is that screen advertising is "forced" advertising. This factor is beyond the control of the theatreman other than that he is privileged to insist that the ads contain the ingredients of entertainment, appropriate music, etc.

Most newspaper publishers will be quick to recognize the fairness of the theatre's

Fashion Shows Effective In Attracting Patronage

One of the most effective, inexpensive and potent box-office stimulants, appropriate now that the new year has begun, is the staging of a "1946 Fashion Show," exploiting new winter and pre-spring styles. This popular type of exhibit not only produces an enticing drawing power for both male and female, but at the same time provides a highly entertaining added attraction.

The campaign itself is promoted in connection with leading progressive merchants, those who will feature dresses; those who will feature beachwear, (notice the male attraction); those who will feature hats, even to the point of having a beauty salon contribute the hair styles of the models. A fashion spectacle is actually a culmination of the activity of a store or a group of stores popularizing women's modes, using a theatre's stage as a showcase. Thus, in no way should the house be charged for the expense incurred with the production.

It should be kept in mind that one of the many advantages in promoting a fashion show is the fact that it rates high on the list of many popular department stores' advertising campaigns. However, theatremen are advised to hasten in their efforts, for the stores themselves will hold these shows before Easter unless theatre cooperation is forthcoming. Procuring a theatre for publicizing milady's up-to-date-wear denotes a minor triumph for the merchandiser, for in this manner he can command far greater attention than is possible in the limited space of his store.

A 'Fashion Show' campaign could possibly be run along the following lines:

1. A small orchestra or musical combination should be employed, as well as a few acts of local talent to be used as 'fill-ins' between displaying the different fashions.

2. Where convenient, models should be engaged from well known families, colleges, and personalities in the town.

3. Glamorize the decor of the stage with attractive modern furniture, colorful flowers and alluring drapes to be donated by various merchants, in return for posters and banners in the lobby announcing the make and donor of the gifted items.

4. Have multi-colored spotlights so arranged that models will be "covered" from the time they enter the stage until they depart.

5. Copy about tie-in, fashions and models, should be relayed to the local papers to be plugged well in advance of the attraction.

6. Display announcing tieup, with proper

Repair Broken Sidewalks

Broken sidewalk or curbing in front of the theatre usually, by local ordinance, is the responsibility of the theatre and any accidents caused by such breaks can be the cause of law suits for personal damage. An occasional check on this will obviate the possibility of such an accident.

Marquee Letters Secure?

Damaged marquee letters with bent edges may not fit snugly enough to prevent dislodging and falling in a strong wind. An order to the maintenance man or whoever changes the letters to notify the manager when the letters need replacement should be placed immediately to prevent possible accidents.

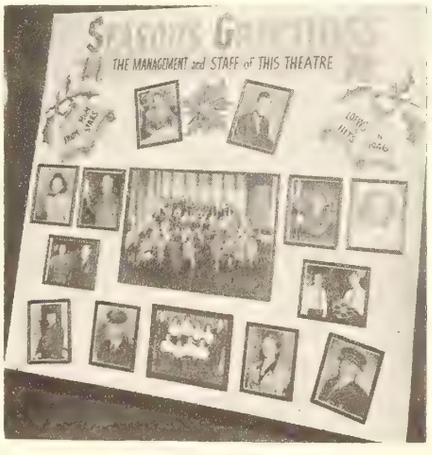
position if it is explained properly. Screen advertising has figured prominently as a needed adjunct to box-office revenue ever since the early days of Thespianism. There is no just premise on which to base any claim that theatres are not entitled to use the facilities they own and pay for in any manner that promises a fair return for the charges assessed.

I would readily wager that the street drop of Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" carried ads suggesting that the patrons visit Kimberly's Pub after the show or to be sure to use " 'andsome 'arry's 'andsome" for a jaunt through the park to make the evening's enjoyment complete.

It is just as fair to question the newspaper publisher's right to hire his own photographer, sell scratch pads, engage in job printing or any one of a dozen and one other activities they consider legitimate sidelines but which nevertheless infringe on the potential market of other local merchants.

The theatreman's argument with the publisher is not a difficult one. The information he publishes about attractions at his theatre is "news" and "news" is his business—his very bread and butter—and the readers of his paper will be quick to resent any deletion of motion picture happenings and he knows it. That's the highest hurdle, it seems to me and it is not one that a resourceful showman would find insurmountable by any means.



As to the ads being obnoxious to patrons, lots of them are, no doubt about that. But if the theatreman sets the rules under which he will exhibit screen advertising and does his business with a reliable agency—and there are many such in the field today—he can overcome this patron-objection angle. Showmen who claim they have done so most successfully, say the theatre must insist—and put it into the contract—upon a reasonable limitation of footage for each merchant—they say 50 or 60 feet is about right. Also, they say that a limit of 3 merchant ads for any period is advisable. Also there should be insistence on appropriate accompanying music, excellent photography and personal check to make sure the merchant is fully satisfied with the promises made by the solicitor.

The size of the revenue is entirely up to you and it is regrettable to say but nonetheless true that most theatre men undersell their screens. Selling the screen too cheaply is one sure way of inviting undesirable merchants and prodding the newspaper publisher to deal with you as an unfair competitor. Keeping the price and quality of advertising up will exclude the junk shops and fly-by-nights and give prestige and dignity to your advertising presentations while at the same time preventing complaint from the publisher because of the wide differential in price.

Less and better screen ads at higher prices are the surest safeguard against newspaper opposition. After all, the newspaper cannot offer anything like fair competition to the screen which gives the advertiser 100 per cent attention of the observer as well as the three-way appeal of animation, sound and illustration. The newspaper's one-way reader circulation, with the advertiser's message in direct competition with so many demands for the attention (recent surveys show an average of but 17 per cent readership to each ad), is a very poor second-best in any race for advertiser preference.

In order to keep the pictorial content and accompanying dialogue of screen ads in line with the actual facilities of the advertiser and his business it will be necessary for you to act as guide and counsel to the advertising solicitor. Your contract must give you the privilege of rejection or acceptance, and you'll have to insist that a "library shot" with "set dialogue" where a palm-studded background of ornate splendor, with waiters attired in tuxedos transferring sizzling steaks from silver platters to immaculately covered and expensively decorated tables for guests wearing formal evening attire, is not used to advertise Joe's Hamburger Bar. I've been in attendance where the exhibition of the ad described brought loud and boisterous ridicule from the audience. Such lapses are unforgivable—on the theatre owner's part.

If the ads interfere with the patron's attention to trailers, you can correct the situation by the simple process of avoiding the "bunching" of trailers. Try breaking up your trailers—and the ads too—between the subjects. In some instances it will be impossible, but most programs will permit the showing of one trailer and one or two ads in one spot and the balance in another, with short subject or newsreel breaks between. I believe we've satisfied ourselves that the obstacles in the way of adding good screen advertising to theatre activities are not insurmountable so let's go on to the always pleasant business of contemplating on potential profit.

This is where I have to "build you up" to keep you out of that category that undersells their screens.

Of prime importance to the advertiser is the type and financial status of person who sees, hears, reads and is impressed by, the message offered. Your customers, Mr. Theatre Operator, are the "creme de la creme" of your community because: their very presence in your theatres indicates their appreciation of the nicer and finer things of life; they have money to spend—if they were broke they could not have bought a ticket; they have leisure to enjoy the things they want and are able to buy. You tell me, where else an advertiser can go to contact such a group of sure-fire potential prospects for his merchandise?

Look over your attendance reports for the past year to determine the average number of this "prize potential market" you are in position to introduce to the advertiser every week, and establish the price of your screen advertising accordingly. I recently listened to a highly intelligent discussion on this subject by the executives of one of the nation's larger theatre chains. The consensus was that fewer ads of higher quality from the more dignified and reputable merchants was to be desired. That business offering offense to any audience faction such as beer, liquor, wines or the less desirable merchants would be denied the use of their theatre screens. That a special effort would be exerted to enlist fashionable ladies apparel shops, high grade milliners, furriers, etc. to join with the reputable national advertisers in presenting entertaining and colorful messages to the customers of their theaters.

That looks like a formula that is possible in every town or community and good reputable advertising agencies who specialize in screen ads can always be contacted to carry out the merchants' desires in the way of pictorial and dialogue outline.

The same group of executives concluded that increasing the price would lessen the resistance of the better merchants who heretofore had omitted screen advertising from their budgets because of the less reputable advertisers the low prices had attracted. The price formula was set at $2.50 to $3.00 per week per thousand patrons based on last year's attendance, with reduction to 80 per cent of the previous year in situations affected by the partial closing of war plants, etc.

Summed up it looks like a pretty swell source of revenue.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

Diplomacy Requisite in Handling Crowds

Presence of Manager with Pleasant Assurance Will Placate Waiting Patrons

During the recently concluded war years when inexperienced theatre staffs were the rule rather than the exception it was not unusual for managers to observe, with considerable mental pain, that their customers were being literally shoved around like cattle when the peak crowds harassed ushers and usherettes who knew nothing about handling them except to hotly retort with the first expression that came to their minds and their lips. This situation, of course, did nothing to enhance previously favorable reactions to the theatre and certainly established a more or less bellicose attitude on the part of those who might have had verbal altercations with the theatre crew.

With the looming probability that moviegoers are going to be a little more discriminating in their choice of the theatres they will attend, it behooves managers to start a school of thorough training of the staffs which soon will be more permanent, so that unpleasantness in the handling of future crowds may be avoided.

Set Course of Action

In planning to handle future crowds a course of action should be determined well in advance. A knowledge of your foyer and lobby should enable you to determine the best way to line up a crowd so that the first arrivals may be seated first when seats become available. Posts and standee tapes may be required, and usually are, but care should be taken that tapes should not be held by ushers in such a manner that more than a light pressure is put upon anyone, otherwise the "herding" reaction will be resented and complaints will be numerous. Allowance should be made for free movement of patrons in and out of the theatre, and great care must be used to prevent the blocking of fire exits.

One primary and vital thought which managers will do well to keep in mind is this: If you make the wait pleasant, your patrons will not mind waiting. And one of the most important things that will make the wait as pleasant as possible (with the exception of lobby entertainment) is your patrons' knowledge that seating is being arranged on a first-come, first-served basis. Crowds are apt to become boisterous; they are liable to push and shove; they might break your lines and roam the aisles looking for seats themselves, should any violation of this important factor be permitted by your staff. Dissatisfaction and loss of goodwill is the inevitable result of such an occurrence on the part of both the seat hunters and those who already are seated and trying to enjoy the show.

Will Preclude Complaints

Every manager knows, or should know, that announcements should be made at the box-office window, before tickets are purchased, that there will be a wait of a definite length of time for seats, or that seats are available in the balcony only. This will preclude complaints in most cases from waiting patrons. When they finally get into your theatre they will be prepared to wait, and the presence near the waiting crowd of the manager, assistant manager, or someone in authority to immediately answer questions pleasantly or to reassure the waiting patrons that seats will be available in ten minutes or whatever the time actually is, will go a long way toward maintaining the even temper of the crowd and the valuable goodwill your theatre requires for successful operation.

There is always present the man or woman whose sense of inferiority demands that special attention be given him. Everyone in theatre business at one time or another has had to "yes" the pest who loses his temper, has had a fight with his wife, or for some reason demands to see the manager—he wants his money back—he can't wait for seats, etc., etc., and etcetera! The application of a little diplomacy more often than not satisfies this type of person. By drawing him out of the line and aside and by explaining, confidentially, that his type of person should not have to wait, but that you're dreadfully sorry that the crowding has inconvenienced him and that you are sure that he will be able to get excellent seats in so many minutes usually suffices. The fact that he has received the manager's personal attention and reassurance gives a lift to the injured ego and he usually retires to his former place in line, becomes meek and easily directed with the inward sense of satisfaction that "I certainly told him!" He almost always forgets that he has gained nothing!

A Problem—But Not Serious

The vociferous guy who directs his corny wit at one of the ushers by asking for two singles together or some such Joe Millerian crack, is a problem, but not a serious one. A smart manager can use this type to divert the minds of waiting patrons by a mild exchange of the same sort of banter, making the waiting time pass more quickly.

The manager's presence in the lobby or foyer goes a long way toward informing a crowd that he has their interests in mind and that he is doing everything possible to make their wait as short as he can. Leaving crowds alone, or with just an usher present is an almost sure way to start grumbling and discontent. Demonstrate in every way you can that you appreciate the fact that these people are willing to stand and wait to get seats in your theatre.

Never Display Partiality

Just one more "don't." Never make a display of partiality by singling out individuals and giving them seats ahead of others except in the case of single seats that have been refused by those at the head of your line. Nothing arouses the ire of a crowd more quickly.

Old ladies, mothers with babies, the infirm—these may be given high priority in seating without resentment from the others. They'll never resent any common sense move on your part—provided that it's basically correct—that shows concern and good manners.

Actually the best way managers can learn to handle crowds is—to handle crowds! Get right down with the crowds, talk to individuals. Subordinates in charge are not enough. The presence of the manager, simply because he is the manager and carries authority, is the best assurance to your standees that they will be given proper attention. Handled correctly, they'll come again, and again—and what's more they won't mind standing!

Curbs Juvenile Delinquency

With acts of vandalism running extremely high in Lewistown, Montana, Jack Welsh, city manager, opened his long-closed Broadway Theatre and then concentrated his efforts toward curbing he juvenile delinquency problem. Welsh argued that by giving youngsters something worth while to do, including fundamental business training, they might keep their minds from entertaining petty deeds. At the same time he felt he had a possible solution to the closed-house expense each week.

The innovation of a "Youth Theatre" was brought into effect, which involved operation of the house by the youth of Lewistown. Including all phases of management, juveniles selected their manager and then designated the staff right down to a publicity director.

As a result, the theatre is operating profitably, young people are getting sound training and experience, and a general reduction in juvenile delinquency is being effected. Surely there are many other "white elephant" theatres that could be put to the same valuable use in other cities.

Fashion Show Effective In Attracting Patronage theatre and playdate credit, should be featured in all cooperating merchants' windows.

7. Run a trailer listing the name of contributing stores and models.

8. Have local newspaper fashion editors sponsor, direct and announce the show.

9. Heralds should be distributed at the theatre and at the cooperating stores two weeks in advance.

10. Where possible, have a sound truck ballyhoo the show on opening night.

11. Design a carpeted runway leading from the center of the stage out over the orchestra pit into the auditorium for about five or six rows.

12. On the opening day of the event, or perhaps the evening before, induce newspapers to carry front-page items, while inside should appear a large layout featuring merchant ads, details of the show, list of models, etc.

As a novelty idea, which incidentally has been tried with great success, is that of an extra added "Male Fashion Show" which might tail-end the women's exhibit. Same tieup could be put into effect with local men's shops, window displays and newspaper stories.

Inspect Roof Wiring

An examination of the often neglected electric wiring on the theatre roof will reveal whether or not it is properly supported and if the insulation has begun to rot or wear from exposure.

Check the Lights

A periodic check of lighting in washrooms, on stairs, over exits, in aisles and in other strategic spots can prevent accidents that might prove costly to the patron as well as to the theatre.

THE BOX OFFICE SLANT

The Catman of Paris

Republic Horror 65 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Another horror offering, with little of the usual amount of suspense.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Will make a satisfactory secondary feature in the usual horror situation.

Cast: Carl Esmond, Lenore Aubert, Adele Mara, Douglass Dumbriile, Gerald Mohr, Fritz Feld, Francis Pierlot, George Renavent, Francis McDonald, Maurice Cass, Alphonse Martell, Paul Marion, John Dehner, Anthony Caruso, Carl Neubert, Elaine Lange, Tanis Chandler, George Davis: Credits: Produced by Marek M. Libkov. Directed by Lesley Selander. Original screenplay by Sherman L. Lowe. Photography, Reggie Lanning.

Plot: Paris is terrorized by the Catman, who roams the darkened streets, bent on murder. A writer is suspected of being the Catman, but cannot deny it because of a strange illness that leaves him with lapses of memory. His young sweetheart risks death to prove to herself and to him that he is not the dread creature. With the help of police, she rounds up the monster and kills him. The young man is released from the hypnotic influence and is reunited with his faithful sweetheart.

Comment: Although a typical horror picture, "The Catman of Paris" lacks the atmosphere, suspense and bloodcurdling occurrences the fans expect to find, and becomes instead just a dramatic story about one man's fears. But it will serve satisfactorily as a secondary feature on a horror bill, for it does have several killings and a shadowy figure who turns into a cat with the first sound of a meow. Title role is well handled by Carl Esmond, and Douglass Dumbrille gives his usual smooth performance in a role of equal importance. Lenore Aubert and Adele Mara are okay as the two women in Esmond's life and Gerald Mohr and Fritz Feld make satisfactory police investigators. Direction is by Lesley Selander; production by Marek M. Libkov.

Dragonwyck

20th-Fox Drama 103 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) A class picture for those who like tense, absorbing, costume dramas, without the advantage of any light or comic moments, but with unusually splendid portrayals.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Plenty of names to sell. Top product for the class houses where the serious type of patrons predominate.

Cast: Gene Tierney, Walter Huston, Vincent Price, Glenn Langan, Anne Revere, Spring Byington, Connie Marshall, Henry Morgan, Vivienne Osborne, Jessica Tandy, Trudy Marshall, Reinhold Schunzel, Jane Nigh, Ruth Ford, Scott Elliott, Boyd Irwin, Maya Van Horn, Keith Hitchcock, Francis Pierlot. Credits: Written for the screen and directed by Joseph L. Mankiewicz. From the novel by Anya Seton. Photography, Arthur Miller.

Plot: The daughter of poor but proud farmer is sent to live with a wealthy, distant relative. She marries the man of the household, after his wife dies under strange circumstances. His actions become more and more sinister after their young son dies. With the help of a young doctor who is in love with her, she at last learns the truth about her husband, and escapes after he is killed by one of his tenant-farmers.

Comment: Though this is a splendidly made, excellently portrayed, tense, absorbing drama, it is not the type of film that will attract the average theatregoer. It is a class picture that will find its best following among the more serious type of patron, for it is a tale about one man's obsession, without any light moments or comic relief throughout its entire unfolding. The entertainment it carries is comparable to that found in "Jane Eyre" and pictures of like calibre, with their strange atmosphere, mood and suspense. Gene Tierney in the leading role is excellent and Vincent Price, as the egomaniac, gives a performance that is memorable with its shadings of insanity and rationalism. Of exceptional merit, too, are the performances turned in by Walter Huston, Anne Revere, Glenn Langan and Vivienne Osborne. Joseph L. Mankiewicz deserves credit for his masterful direction and the screenplay of this Darryl F. Zanuck production.

Riders of the Santa Fe

Universal Western 65 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) This story of the frontier has all the ingredients necessary—and more—to please action fans.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: While Rod Cameron isn't as strong at the ticket window as some other Western stars, this offering will add to his following. Fuzzy Knight has a good name as a slapstick Western comedian, too.

Cast: Rod Cameron, Fuzzy Knight, Jennifer Holt, Eddie Dew, George Douglas, Lane Chandler, Budd Buster. Credits: Produced by Oliver Drake. Directed by Wallace W. Fox. Photography, Maury Gertsman. Screenplay, Ande Land.

Plot: During the pioneer days out West, a bad hombre illegally takes possession of the region's water rights. Legitimate ranchers of the community are in a jam because livestock is threatened with extinction because of thirst. The town marshall finally gets the goods on the villain, after seeming to side with him.

Comment: This Western has a better-than-average drive to it, with many of the normal situations eliminated. Direction is excellent, making the most of the screenplay. Rod Cameron screens well and has a good speaking voice. Fuzzy Knight is one of the best bets in action pictures for comedy roles; he is always good for a laugh when he appears. Toward the end of the film, there is a little too much gunplay, evidently overdoing the battle between the good and bad forces—but many Western fans can't get enough of this thing. Photography is very good. Jennifer Holt as the girl is fine for her type of role, usually done in a mediocre way. The picture will really please in Western situations everywhere.

Sweet-Tooth Culprit

Young Widow

United Artists Drama 100 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Slow-moving story lacks smooth continuity, thus lessening its chances of complete audience enjoyment. Just a moderately entertaining film for average audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Concentrated exploitation on the much-publicized Jane Russell may produce better-than-average business.

Cast: Jane Russell, Louis Hayward, Faith Domergue, Marie Wilson, Kent Taylor, Penny Singleton, Connie Gilchrist, Cora Witherspoon, Steve Brodie, Norman Lloyd, Richard Bailey, Robert Holton, Peter Garey, Bill Moss, Bill 'Red' Murphy. Credits: Produced by Hunt Stromberg. Directed by Edwin L. Marin. Screenplay by Richard Macauley and Margaret Buell Wilder from a novel by Clarissa Fairchild Cushman. Additional dialog by Ruth Nordli. Photography, Lee Garmes.

Plot: Jane Russell, widow of a flier killed in action, returns to her newspaper job in America, despondent and unable to forget her dead husband and the things they did together. She meets Lt. Louis Hayward, whose attempts to make her fall in love with him fail until he is about to leave for Japan. Their actions and reactions to each other and the gradual change in her point of view develop as their liking for each other increases. She promises to wait as his squadron flies toward the Pacific.

Comment: Whether the fault of direction or editing, "Young Widow," in itself a slow-moving story, lacks smooth continuity, thus lessening its chances of complete audience enjoyment. The picture has been accorded excellent production values, including photography and musical scoring, as well as excellent performances on the part of all but the two principals. Louis Hayward limns his portrayal in an apparent tongue-in-cheek manner, while Jane Russell, although as beautiful as any girl yet to appear on the screen, is unable to meet the demands of a role that would be difficult for the most seasoned performer to accomplish with any degree of believability. Penny Singleton and Marie Wilson, the former as the wife of a Navy man who waits for the day when he will return, and the latter again as a dumb but luscious blonde, contribute notable performances, especially Miss Singleton, who plays one scene in a manner that should bring tears to most feminine spectators. As a whole, "Young Widow" is just a moderately entertaining film for average audiences, although concentrated exploitation on the much-publicized Jane Russell may produce better-than-average business.

The Bandit of Sherwood Forest

(Color)

Columbia Drama 85 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Another enjoyable, colorful tale about Robin Hood's adventures. Made in magnificent Technicolor, it has both eye-appeal and heart-appeal and is excellent entertainment for everyone.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Only marquee name may be Cornel Wilde, but it's worthy of other means of attracting, for the customers will get their money's worth and word-of-mouth will build a following.

Cast: Cornel Wilde, Anita Louise, Jill Esmond, Edgar Buchanan, Henry Daniell, George Macready, Russell Hicks, John Abbott, Lloyd Corrigan, Eva

Moore, Ral Teal, Leslie Denison, Ian Wolfe, Maurice R. Tauzin. Credits: Directed by George Sherman and Henry Levin. Screenplay by Wilfrid H. Pettitt and Melvin Levy. Story by Paul A. Castleton and Wilfrid H. Pettitt. Based upon the novel "Son of Robin Hood" by Paul A. Castleton. Photography, Tony Gaudio, Williab Snyder, George B. Meehan, Jr. Technicolor Color Director, Natalie Kalmus; Associate, Francisco C. Cugat. Produced by Leonard S. Piscker and Cliord Sanforth.

Plot: Robin Hood and his band set out to rescue the boy King of England when they learn that his death is being plotted by the tyrannical Regent. They almost succeed, but Robin Hood and a lady-in-waiting are trapped in the palace and thrown in the dungeon. The Regent challenges the young bandit to a duel, after withholding food and water for three days. But the young lady helps by sending him some of her victuals, and Robin Hood is victorious.

Comment: Columbia brings back to the screen that adventurous character Robin Hood in this latest Technicolor offering. For the patrons who enjoyed his many adventures in the past and for those who like good, exciting, colorful stories this will prove excellent entertainment. From the opening scene to the final, thrilling duel between Cornel Wilde in the title role and Harry Daniell as the tyrannical Regent, the picture is filled with rousing action. There are plenty of gay, happy moments and a romance that will have both men and women rooting for the young lovers. The Technicolor photography is magnificent and the settings and costumes in excellent taste; factors which contribute much to the telling of the story. Cornel Wilde is splendid in the role of the son of Robin Hood and Anita Louise gives a fine performance as Lady Catherine. But though their parts dominate the story, and their work is outstanding, there are many other members of the fine cast who impress by reason of fine characterizations. Among them: Jill Esmond as the Queen, Edgar Buchanan as a Friar, Russell Hicks as the original Robin Hood and Henry Daniell as the Regent. Direction credits go to George Sherman and Henry Levin, and both Leonard S. Picker and Clifford Sanford are credited with handling the production reins.

The Madonna's Secret

Republic Drama 79 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Excellent entertainment with top-notch performances by Francis Lederer, Ann Rutherford and Gail Patrick. A little too involved to be thoroughly enjoyed by most children.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: With stronger marquee names this might have been a top boxoffice draw. Even as it is the picture should do better than average business, particularly since word of mouth advertising is bound to be favorable.

Cast: Francis Lederer, Gail Patrick, Ann Rutherford, Edward Ashley, Linda Stirling, John Litel, Leona Roberts, Michael Hawks, Clifford Brooke, Pierre Watkin, Will Wright, Geraldine Wall, John Hamilton. Credits: Associate producer, Stephen Auer. Directed by William Thiele. Original screenplay by Bradbury Foote and William Thiele. Photography, John Alton.

Plot: Three models who worked for artist Francis Lederer each have been found successively murdered under almost exact circumstances. Ann Rutherford, sister of one of the murdered girls, also poses for Lederer in an attempt to find out the truth about the murders and if possible to obtain sufficient evidence to convict him. She falls in love with him, however, and nearly becomes a victim herself at the hands of the real murderer. She is saved and she and Lederer begin a new life.

Comment: This is obviously a serious effort on the part of Republic Pictures to extend their field into more lavish production efforts than has heretofore been their forte. The picture has been given lavish production facilities and the directorial efforts of William Thiele, its co-author, leaves little to be desired except in very minor instances where a firmer hand might have guided the cast along more convincing lines. Francis Lederer gives one of his finest motion picture performances as the moody, introspective and slightly psychopathic artist whose psychological fixations become more pronounced as his models are murdered under circumstances which seem to involve him. Knowing the depth of his own melancholic moods he is unable to be sure in his own mind that he has not been involved in the killings and his doubts cause him to believe that his sanity is in danger. His interpretation of this character by using every acting trick in the book is thoroughly convincing every minute he is on the screen. His doting mother, played by Leona Roberts also is an excellent characterization. Linda Sterling and Gail Patrick, who play a professional model and dilettante, respectively, do fine jobs and Ann Rutherford as the girl who finally gets Lederer is better in this than in any role she has had recently. The only part in the picture that does not ring true is that of a newspaper dramatic editor, played by Edward Ashley as though he had read too much about Lucius Beebe. All minor roles are well cast and very well acted. The picture as a whole is excellent. suspenseful entertainment for all types of adult audiences. Although there is nothing contained in it to be objectionable for children, the plot is a little too involved to be enjoyed thoroughly by most of them. "The Madonna's Secret" is worthy of every promotional effort that showmen can put forth to exploit it. The film should do better than average business if properly handled.

Border Bandits

Monogram Western 57 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) An entertaining Western that should please the lovers of outdoor action.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Johnny Mack Brown, voted one of the ten most popular Western stars in STR's Leaders of the Motion Picture Industry poll, adds to his standing in this one. Raymond Hatton should help pull 'em in, too.

Plot: A Mexican grandee is murdered after telling his granddaughter about his fortune in jewels. Two U. S. marshals finally succeed in apprehending the villain, the town banker. Everything ends well with the murdered man's granddaughter and her lover being reunited, and the marshals going on their way.

Comment: This picture has more of the Spanish touch than usual in a Western, but this doesn't detract from the action and fast movement typical of the outdoor film. Direction of Lambert Hillyer is responsible for a fast pace. Frank LaRue does a good job as the villain and Johnny Mack Brown is excellent in the title role. Rosa del Rosario does okay as the senorita. Raymond Hatton is getting more popular for his part as Brown's sidekick, and should help in adding to the box-office appeal of the film. Photography is above average for Westerns.

Murder in the Music Hall

Republic Mystery With Music 84 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Very good combination of murder mystery and ballet on ice which should entertain even the more discriminating audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Marquee names do not have strength enough to allow this to stand without support. Two first run west coast theatres, however, have held it over for a second week, benefited by a good exploitation effort.

Cast: Vera Hruba Ralston, William Marshall, Helen Walker, Nancy Kelly, William Gargan, Ann Rutherford, Julie Bishop, Jerome Cowan, Edward Norris, Jack LaRue, Frank Orth, Fay McKenzie, Paul Hurst, James Craven, Ilka Gruning, Mary Field, Anne Nagel, LeRoy Mason, Tom London. Specialty ice stars: Condon and Bohland, Red McCarthy, Patti Phillippi, John Jolliffe, Henry Lie. Credits: Associate Producer, Herman Millakowsky. Directed by John English. Screenplay by Frances Hyland and Laszlo Gorog from an original story by Arnold Phillips and Maria Matray. Photography, Jack Marta. Ice sequences photographed by John Alton.

Plot: Blackmail seems to be the motive for the murder of a former producer of ice show numbers. Those involved include Vera Hruba Ralston, star of the Music Hall ice ballet, and her friends and co-performers Helen Walker, Ann Rutherford, Julie Bishop and a former co-worker, Nancy Kelly, now married to a famous newspaper columnist. William Gargan is the police inspector on the case and how he, William Marshall and the girls unravel the mystery provides the plot's motivation.

Comment: Republic has provided Producer Herman Millakowsky with every facility needed to make this production top-drawer, and Director John English has taken advantage of these facilities and a good cast to deliver a much better than average mystery combined with several delightfully entertaining ice ballet numbers which, for a change, have not been encumbered by a this-is-my-chance plot. The ice ballet numbers have been presented in a setting that indicates that each of the performers has arrived—the picture producers admit that they are among the best and make no bones about the fact. The murder mystery reaches a logical conclusion without contrived heroics, and except for the denouement is as good a mystery as has been seen on the screen in a long time. And even the denouement has a basis in the plot's unraveling, although when the killer is unmasked the method of presenting the fait accompli is a little bit strained. Miss Ralston's performance as a bewildered, frightened star of the ice ballet is an improvement upon her previous screen appearances and leaves little to be desired. William Marshal appears to be gallant in the approved manner and is big and sufficiently masculine on the screen to promise more of his appearances in the future. The others are well cast and act convincingly. Fay McKenzie, as a night club performer, is delightful, beautiful and appealing. Theatregoers will demand more of her. Miss McKenzie's delivery of several songs is much better than many of her more publicized sisters. Most audiences will be well entertained by "Murder in the Music Hall," and supported by good exploitation the picture should do good business.

Cohen, Horwitz Essay Ace 'Harvey Girls' Campaign

A bang-up, all inclusive exploitation campaign on "The Harvey Girls" resulted from the efforts of Lou Cohen, manager of Loew's Poli Theatre, Hartford, and his assistant Sam Horwitz, including window displays, cooperative newspaper ads, counter displays, radio cooperation which included a radio contest, special lobby displays, a juke box ballyhoo and considerable extra space in newspapers dating back as far as December.

With the cooperation of the local Decca record distributor in the Hartford area the Poli duo obtained eight full window displays on the Harvey Girls Record Album and counter displays galore in Woolworth's, Kresge's and Grant's stores, tieing in records and sheet music with the film.

Unique Window Display

A unique window display was arranged with a barber shop, just around the corner from the theatre, which featured old type shaving mugs and fancy razors dating back to the days of "The Harvey Girls." The display was decorated with stills from the film and a large card with explanatory copy.

Two days before opening and on opening day cooperative beauty shop ads broke in the Times and Courant respectively and shortly before this a 3 column by 14 inch co-op ad of the Sage-Allen Company featured dresses with "stripes appeal" and tiein copy, "They all love stripes from the Harvey Girls of 1886 to the Hartford Girls of 1946." Theatre credits appeared prominently in the Courant ad which was illustrated with a cut of Judy Garland and John Hodiak in an appropriately captioned scene from the film. In the Times Cohen and Horwitz planted another co-op ad sponsored by G. Fox and Company, the largest department store in the state, featuring the Harvey Girls Record album.

Radio Helps Plenty

The radio contest was conducted on opening day on both morning and afternoon sessions of a local disc jockey program on which Judy Garland records were played and listeners asked to name the pictures in which the songs originated. First 15 winners at each session were given guest tickets. Previously a daily quiz program gave each contestant tickets to see "The Harvey Girls" at Loew's Poli and gave the starting date. On a night owl show arrangements were made to play songs from the picture with appropriate announcements made with the presentation of the tickets to the contestants, resulting in at least six announcements about the film being made at each Quiz show.

A Man in the Street radio program cooperated, too, by asking passers-by their opinions on musicals such as "The Harvey Girls" with tickets given to each person interviewed. A local book-reviewer, Jane Carter, devoted her entire 15 minutes of air time discussing the film about a week in advance of the opening day.

Through a tieup with a juke box dealer arrangements were made to use cards on the machines urging patrons to play music from the picture.

Recordings from the film were played before and after all shows at the theatre a month in advance of showing and the theatre lobby's miniature stage featured an eye-catching display of colored photographic enlargements.

Nylons Cause Furore

Manager Matt Saunders, Loew's Poli Theatre, Bridgeport can attest to the efficacy of offering pairs of nylons in a newspaper contest, having been practically inundated with letters on the contest he arranged with the Bridgeport Post to exploit his showing of "Spellbound." The contest had to do with identifying the films in which Ingrid Bergman had appeared from obscure stills printed in the newspaper four days in a row. The ladies needed nylons and whether they knew the answers or not they wrote to Matt. Whew!—BR.

The Devil Was Deviled!

In the words of the Bridgeport Sunday Herald, and right smack on its front page, a headline read, "Bluecoats Don't Catch The Devil," and it all came about because of a street ballyhoo arranged by manager Fred Greenway of the Palace Theatre. That the stunt nearly exploded in Greenway's face didn't detract from the publicity he got. It began like this:

The theatre's porter and handy man was dressed up in a devil costume with a sign on his back reading, "The Devil says—'Leave Her to Heaven'" etc. He scared the dickens out of some small fry who hadn't seen the sign on his back and they ran screaming to their mothers' skirts. Some of the mothers became indignant and incoherent telephone complaints came pouring into Bridgeport's police headquarters. The police finally gathered what was up and sent a few bluecoats out to round up the devil.

Getting wind of it the devil started on his way back to the theatre with the cops in pursuit, but he managed to keep them far enough behind his erratic course through stores and streets and on the way he got a little panicky.

Greenway was waiting at the theatre with a photographer ready to snap what was to have been the crowning stunt—the devil sticking at some woman with his blunted pitchfork. But the devil never arrived. On the way he shed his devil clothes to get away from the cops and when he did show up it was as just plain Harry C. White, porter and handy-man.

"Leave Her to Heaven" finally wound up its run after three healthy weeks at the Palace.

5 Weeks Campaign for 'Trunk' Coast Premiere

An elaborate advance campaign covering a period of five weeks is preceding the west coast premiere of Warners' "Saratoga Trunk" for its simultaneous showings at the Hollywood, Downtown and Wiltern theatres, scheduled for March 8.

The campaign includes a billboard splurge of special teasers which will continue until just preceding the openings and which will be reposted with pictorial paper for the run.

A tieup with 25 leading bookstores and 49 public libraries throughout Southern California involves window and counter displays as well as other exploitation, with Grosset and Dunlap, publishers of the book, cooperating on this section of the campaign.

The radio campaign has been under way since the first week in February, with specially recorded time signals being used every hour until the opening date.

Another highlight is the distribution of more than 50,000 "Saratoga Trunk" bookmarks.

7th Scripps-Howard Paper Joins 'Reputation' Contest

The Rocky Mountain News is the seventh Scripps-Howard newspaper participating in the "What My Reputation Means to Me" contests being conducted in conjunction with local openings of Warners' "My Reputation." Three Denver theatres, the Denver, Esquire and Webber, opened with the picture simultaneously with the newspaper's sponsorship of the contest.

Prizes of $100 in cash, plus 150 pairs of tickets to "My Reputation" will be awarded to Denverites submitting the best short essays on the value of a good reputation.

TARS AND SPARS

(Columbia)

Columbia's 'Spars' Reaps Exploitation Harvest From Nationally Accepted Stunts

Two stunts that turned the national spotlight on Columbia's "Tars and Spars" and which were followed up by smart exploitation across the country by Columbia's field men, sparked on-the-spot campaigns for the film in pre-release dates with results that added up to outstanding space in newspapers and time on air. The campaigns where so all-inclusive and indicative of smart showmanship that they have been selected by a panel of showmen for SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW as the Exploitation Campaign of the Month for January 1946.

Top Stunt

Perhaps the top individual stunt of the campaign was dreamed up by Bob Ferguson, Columbia ad writer, who conceived the idea of tatking advantage of the national furore created by cab driver Harry Arisohn when he volunteered to drive five stranded overseas vets from Los Angeles to their homes in the East. By the simple expedient of renaming the cab the "Tars and Spars Special" and agreeing to finance the home trip to the coast, carrying Coast Guardsmen and other servicemen along the route, newspaper and radio cooperation seemed assured. Al Rylander, special events director and assistant Leo Pillot further developed the idea and with the cooperation of the United States Coast Guard, newspapers and radio stations the re-christened cab started its long trek westward, stopping en route in Columbia's exchange cities where exploitation men had made preparations for arrival of the cab and plenty of publicity for "Tars and Spars."

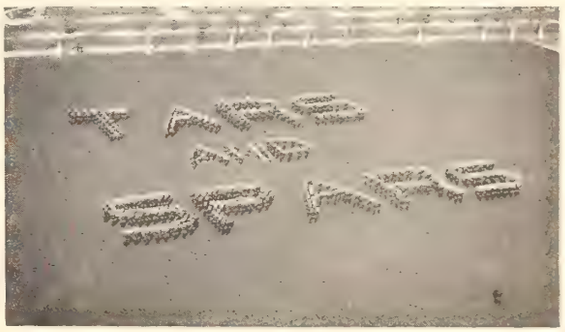
Just prior to the cab stunt arrangements were made with the commander of the U. S. Coast Guard station at Manhattan Beach, Brooklyn, to have the last company of Coast Guardsmen spell out gigantic letters made up by the men to read "Tars and Spars." The photographs made of this event broke newspapers and roto sections all over the country, even though the crossing section of the letter "N" in the word "and" was slightly off(?). Whether this was done deliberately or not it made the photo even more intriguing to newspaper editors who mentioned the error and also mentioned the odd coincidence that Columbia had produced a new film by the same name!

Newspapers Receptive

When Arisohn's "Tars and Spars" taxicab left New York the Daily News, Mirror, Journal-American, World-Telegram and Brooklyn Eagle carried photos and stories and the conservative New York Times, Herald-Tribune and Sun used generous stories with every wire service picking up the human interest event for dissemination to subscriber newspapers across the country. News broadcast networks and local stations featured the story and started the cab merrily along preceded by intriguing publicity that prepared news and photo editors on the itinerary to look for the arrival of the cab in their cities.

Some bad luck the cab encountered was turned into additional newspaper stories—such as the time Arisohn was pinched for speeding in Cleveland. This broke front page space! Then the commandant of the Marine Corps in Chicago held a party in one of the city's largest hotels to select two serviceman to hop aboard enroute west to replace a couple who had reached destination. The party got out-of-hand, so many vets tried to get the two available seats, resulting in the newspapers pointing out to readers again that transportation facilities were woefully limited.

The stunt's real pay-off came a week after the Tars and Spars Special had reached the coast. The independent taxicab association to which Arisohn belongs hopped on his basic idea and named 25 of their cabs "Tars and Spars Limited" and placed them on regular run to points as far east as Cincinnati. The serviceman sympathy angle resulted in enormous newspaper space throughout the country, results of which are still pouring in to the Columbia home office.



Other Special Events

Other stunts worked by the special events boys included placing a wreath on the grave of Alexander Hamilton, commemorating the 188th anniversary of the birth of the founder of the

Human Interest Angle Sparks Levy's 'Spellbound' Selling

A new slant in tieups was pulled by Larry R. Levy and Karl Fasick, manager and assistant manager respectively of Loew's Colonial Theatre, Reading, Pa. recently when they put over an ad in local papers that featured "Spellbound" in connection with the new Zenith Hearing Aid. The ad was run by Dr. M. and Dr. J. A. Liefter, optometrists.

Perhaps the tieup itself wasn't so unusual, but the manner of doing it was. Take a gander at the ad copy: "'Spellbound,' starring Ingrid Bergman and Gregory Peck, now showing at Loew's, featuring Patricia Joyce Anderson, brilliant child star who wears a Zenith Radionic Hearing Aid." Then the blurb goes on to say that Ittle Miss Anderson got her chance for possible future stardom because she uses the Zenith Hearing Aid to correct a 70 per cent hearing deficiency. This was nice work on the part of Levy, Fasick, and the Drs. Liefter because the story had a legitimate human angle that would interest almost anybody. "If Patricia could gain so much from the hearing aid, why not me?" was the natural intimation for the susceptible reader, with the added idea that it would be much easier to enjoy "Spellbound" under such conditions.

Unusually Complete

The Levy-Fasick campaign for "Spellbound" was unusually complete, other co-op ads including large two-column displays for Royal Crown Cola, jewelry and beauty tieups with Whitner's department store, and a "Spellbound" perfume ad that ran three times. Extra space was taken for the regular theatre ads, featuring a special two-column, 80 per cent white space ad that appeared in both local papers the Saturday before opening.

Reade's department store gave away 3000 stills of Gregory Peck and took a three-column ad to tell about it. Heralds, bus cards, and other teasers thoroughly covered the city, with 10,000 heralds inserted in laundry deliveries the week of showing. A half dozen window tieups also contributed to the general effect.

In another Pennsylvania community—Harrisburg, the State capital—Sam Gilman of Loew's Regent utilized a campaign that almost exactly duplicated Levy's activities in Reading. He set up several window displays and promoted cooperative ads, including a tieup with the local Zenith Hearing Aid distributor; arranged library and bookshop displays and the distribution of bookmarks; promoted spot announcements on local radio stations, and distributed 5000 heralds and 2000 window cards, in addition to placing cards in hotels and cigar stores and napkins in restaurants. Gilman's War Bond Premiere of "Spellbound," held last December, was freely publicized by the press, and this, with the word-of-mouth comment that followed the showing, accounted for wide public interest in the regular engagement.

BUBBLES FOR YOLANDA. A live model was used in this bubble bath window display which was inspired by MGM's "Yolanda and the Thief," when Charles W. Barnes Jr. played the picture at the Granada Theatre, Kansas City, Kansas. You guessed it—they had to call the police to handle the crowds!

Pledge to Keep Mum

A novel attention-getter for "The Spiral Staircase" was created by R. V. Conner, managing director of the RKO Palace, New York, a "pledge" which patrons signed promising not to reveal the surprise ending of the picture. Using the stock one-sheet from the production, Conner had it lettered over at the top with the following legend: "Keep the Secret of 'The Spiral Staircase!" Down below he affixed white paper with black lettering reading: "Pledge Not to Tell!" Secured to this was a large pad and pencil for patrons to sign on their way out of the theatre.

'Weekend's' Two-Day Record in Fairlee

Motion picture attendance for all time was shattered this week at Fairlee, Vermont, where aided by Paramount's gracious consent, the town's only theatre played "The Lost Weekend" for two days in a row. Reason behind this terrific record is the fact that Charles Jackson, Fairlee's most distinguished son, is the author of the story, and was honored by his city during the picture's long term engagement.

There is but one theatre in town, the Fairlee, operated by Miss Winona Vogle. Using tremendous salesmanship, this intrepid exhibitor prevailed up Paramount to allow her to play the picture not for a single day, but for two days. This cracked all existing records for the city and the theatre, since never before in its history had it been open two full days in a week.

The town-shaking publicity secured on this gala premiere of premieres found Miss Vogle in a tough spot. She only had sufficient fuel to heat the house for one night. But proud Fairleeites rushed to her rescue and provided enough fuel for both performances. So "The Lost Weekend" cracked every existing record in Fairlee's history, a record believed by veteran Fairleeians which will remain unsullied for time immemorial.

Sets Wide Coverage for 'Deadline' Ad Campaign

The extensive national advertising campaign planned for RKO Radio's "Deadline at Dawn" will exceed 20 million in circulation and will extend beyond regular channels to reach readers of leading detective story magazines, according to S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity.

Advertising in magazines of such wide coverage as Saturday Evening Post, Look, Time, Liberty, Photoplay, Pic, Screen Guide, Movie Story, Motion Picture, and other fan magazines will have the added impact of space in the detective story publications.

The campaign will extend through March.

'Tars and Spars' Reaps Exploitation Harvest

Coast Guard and getting Saks Fifth Avenue store to hang a banner from its flag pole welcoming the famous 82nd Airborne Division on behalf of Tars and Spars, the day the famous outfit was the center of New York's patriotic fervor as it marched up Fifth Avenue.

The theatremen who first played the film, however, put its exploitation campaign in the top brackets. In Washington where the film opened at Warner's Metropolitan Theatre, Manager John Marcon and Warner's zone publicity director Frank LaFalce turned the capital temporarily into Coast Guard headquarters.

Spars and Coastguardsmen were actually enlisted in the theatre's service, although orders called it a temporary assignment, to help in the publicity and exploitation efforts of the Warner and Columbia crews.

Radio was one of the big outlets for the opening with free spots promoted from every station in the city two days ahead of the opening and continuing for the run of the picture. In addition, nearly every show originating in Washington featured Spars assigned to the publicity campaign.

Proclamation Issued

LaFalce arranged to have the commissioner of Washington, D. C. issue a proclamation hailing the Coast Guard and its present recruiting drive and urging the citizens to see "Tars and Spars" at the Metropolitan, and for the younger male citizens to sign up for a hitch in the Coast Guard at the booth established in the theatre lobby.

Newspapers in Washington printed photographs of Sid Caesar, Coast Guard veteran and star of the film, as he presented Secretary of the Treasury Vinson with a pass to see the film at any theatre. With jurisdiction over the Coast Guard passing from the Navy back to the Treasury Department about that time it was a news event and the papers recognized it as such with gratifying space.

Shop windows all over Washington gave full space to Coast Guard activities and the picture with hundreds of smaller shops carrying streamers urging enlistment in the Coast Guard and plugging the showing of "Tars and Spars" at the Metropolitan.

Cooperative ads, obtained with the sanction and aid of the city's Better Business Bureau, ran in all Washington newspapers with full pages placed by Kahn's, Palais Royal, Woodward & Lothrop and Garfinkle's, at no expense to the theatre.

Opening night in Washington capped the top exploitation campaign with 200 Tars and Spars led by the Coast Guard band parading to the theatre which was lighted brighter than daylight by two eight-million candlepower searchlights. Motorcycle police preceded the parade in its trek through the city streets with screaming sirens howling attention to the event.

Other Cities Follow Pattern

As the picture's opening approached in Bridgeport, Buffalo, Cincinnati and Milwaukee campaigns of similar nature were put on by theatre men and Columbia field exploiteers and in each case they were able to get the chief executive of the cities to issue a proclamation establishing the week or opening week of the film as "Tars and Spars Week," adding importance to the field exploiteers' efforts as they approached other sources of publicity.

Results of the New York City campaign show promise of reaching heights similar to that achieved in Washington and will be reported in SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW in the future. But the pattern has been set—every theatre playing the film can adopt the campaign to its own advantage.

The following footnote appeared in the Milwaukee Journal under one of the inquiries in the Vox Pop columns: (EDITOR'S NOTE:—"George F. The 3-for-1 split of common shares of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, went through without a hitch and there are now 1,800,000 no-par common. The situation was very different some years ago when the move was made to convert five shares of Canadian stock into two shares of Paramount Theatres common, listed on the New York stock market. Strenuous objection was raised because the switch represented the passing of control of the Canadian circuit to the United States.

DALLAS

In recognition of the splendid record made by J. O. Cherry, during his two-year term as chief barker of Texas Tent No. 17 of Variety, in 1944 and 1945, the Lone Star tent will toss its most spectacular dinner February 22 in the Grand Ballroom of the Adolphus Hotel in Dallas.

The dinner honoring Cherry, who is city manager of Interstate Theatres in Dallas, will be limited to 450 members of Variety and a multitude of prominent civic, political, and business leaders of Dallas and Texas, who will come to pay homage to the man who has guided Variety's Tent 17 into national prominence and recognition for its many-faceted charity endeavor.

The dais will be presided over by William O'Donnell, new 1945 Chief Barker of Tent 17, and Bob O'Donnell, National Chief Barker of Variety. Principal speaker for the night will be Col. Wm. McCraw, long a friend of Variety, and former attorney general of Texas.

Decorations and physical aspects of the dinner are under the direction of Raymond Willie, a director of Tent 17.

Cherry's two-year term as Chief Barker was marked by Tent 17's assumption of complete financial and physical operation of the famous Boy's Ranch at Copperas Cove, Texas, where currently 50 underprivileged boys are being cared for, from boyhood until they reach twenty-one. Plans call for the future caring of 200 boys.

Another of "Skipper" Cherry's outstanding roles in the Texas tent of Variety has been the promotion of the club's Turtle Derby into a gigantic annual event, where for the past two years the gross has been close to $100,000.00 a year. All net profits of the annual Turtle Derby go to Tent 17's charity fund, which has been incorporated into the Variety Foundation of Texas.

Before entering the Army he was manager of the DeKalb, Decatur, Ga.

HARTFORD

With "Bells of St. Mary's,, lining the customers up in long queues in front of the Hartford Strand at every performance, Manager Jomes F. McCarthy is nevertheless proceeding blithely with his "Glass Slipper" contest, which the Warner house is sponsoring in conjunction with the Sage-Allen Company to promote interest in the forthcoming Joan Leslie vehicle, "Cinderella Jones." Hartford lassies are coming forth in droves to try squeezing their tootsies into the tiny glass slipper now on display at the department store. Should more than one girl qualify, the fashion editors of the Courant and Times will select the winner on a personality basis.

That extremely personable publicist, Laura Wells (erstwhile stylist for Powers Studios), hit Connecticut towns this week doing her stint for Selznick's "Duel in he Sun," due here in early summer. Here's one ballyhoo specialist who has no trouble gaining the ears (and eyes) of the boys behind the theatre desks at the newspapers on her beat. She learned her routine from Anita (The Face) Colby, and it's an effective one.

Jack Sanson, manager of the Manchester State, is fuming good naturedly at the mouth because it was reported in this department last week that he succeeded in getting $6 for four pairs of nylons he autcioned off on the last day of the March of Dimes campaign, for the benefit of that cause. Jack opines he'll buy all the nylons he can get his hands on at that price, and not auction thm off, either! The amount he actually got was $65.

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

Tin Pan Alley Tempos (Fair)

Univ. (1305) Name Band Musical 15 Mins.

Phil Ohman and his Orchestra form the musical background for songs by the Pied Pipers and Carolyn Grey, tap dances by Grace Costello and the original compositions of Jimmie Dodd, sung by himself to his guitar accompaniment. The orchestral music is good but lacks color, the same tempo being maintained throughout the orchestral musical numbers and with the singing and dancing. A nicely produced short that might have been improved by cutting.

The Friendly Ghost (Very Good)

Para. (P5-1) Noveltoons 7½ mins.

This is an extremely delightful cartoon about a little ghost who tires of scaring people and leaves the house he is haunting in search of human friends to play with. But his attempts only succeed in scaring everyone away. In desperation he tries to commit suicide, but ghosts are already dead. Finally, two children befriend him, take him home where he proceeds to scare the wits out of the villainous landlord who wants to foreclose on the mortgage.

Hillbillies (Very Good)

Para. (Y5-2) Speaking of Animals 9 mins.

Walking and talking dogs and expert trick photography make this Jerry Fairbanks short one of the best yet. The amazing canines, dressed in hillbilly clothes are shown doing everything from waltzing in a barn square dance to rapping out some delightful corny music. From the first sequence showing a dog sauntering down the road telling every dog he meets about the big barn dance, until the closing shot where the canines are shown singing and dancing, this short will delight audiences young and old.

Running the Team (Good)

Para. (R5-3) Sportlights 9 mins.

The college and grounds of Notre Dame at South Bend are employed as the locale for this entertaining short highlighting football. From dormitory to field the short depicts the method by which Notre Dame trains and pampers its athletes, publicizes and manages its nation-wide games, and finally on Saturday, plays the big game. Ted Husing narrates and is shown broadcasting the big game, which has all of the thrills and spills which gridiron fans have learned to associate with the fighting Irish. Football addicts will go for this and other audiences will find it interesting and entertaining.

Community Sing (Fair)

Columbia (7654) Don Baker 11 mins.

Don Baker's organ music leads the Song Spinners and the audience through Gotta Be This Or That, There's No You, A Kiss Goodnight, Till the End of Time and Good, Good, Good. Similar to previously reviewed Community Sings and just as popular as the others.

Screen Snapshots (Interesting)

Columbia (7853) 9 mins.

Combining a Hollywood fashion show, the Robert Mitchell boys' choir and Leo Carillo's rodeo as the background for such personalities as Jinx Falkenburg, Hillary Brooke, Dale Evans, Connie Haynes, Sharon Douglas, Shirley Ross, Joan Merrill, June Clyde, Dusty Anderson and others, the short provides interesting minutes with the stars.

Screen Snapshots (Interesting)

Columbia (7854) 9 mins.

Cricket and golf provide opportunities for Columbia's ubiquitous cameramen to show short episodes featuring Basil Rathbone, Arthur Treacher, Ronald Colman, C. Aubrey Smith, Nigel Bruce and others viewing and participating in cricket matches and then the short switches to a charity golf match featuring Bing Crosby, Linda Darnell, Ray Bolger, John Carroll, Danny Kae, Leo Gorcey, Ken Murray and Bonita Granville.

Syncho-Smooth Swing (Good)

Universal (1303) Name Band Musical 15 mins.

Ted Fio Rito and His Orchestra present their own music and Gloria Delson, Paul Carley, The Solidaires, Armand and Anita and Evelyn Farney in singing and dancing numbers, accompanied by the smooth accompaniment of Fio Rito's musical aggregation. The short has a good, fast pace with musical arrangements in which the melody predominates, just for a change from the over-arranged, too-stylized conglomerations offered as swing music lately. Good musical short for any program.

Jungle Capers (Amusing)

Universal (1345) Variety View 9 mins.

The entire 9 minutes of this short are devoted to the capers of monkeys of one variety or another. The spider monkey from Central and South America hops around the San Diego Zoo cages with the aid of his prehensile tail with all of the dexterity of a subway strap hanger. The gibbon is shown and the narrative states that he most nearly resembles man in his brain structure. The orang-outang, chimpanzee, the rhesus macaque, the weeping capuchin and two young gorillas also are shown, with accompanying narrative explaining something about the characteristics of each.

Film-Vodvil (Excellent)

Columbia (7953) 11 mins.

This is the liveliest 11 minutes of bombastic entertainment seen in short subjects in some time. The music is provided by Morale's Copacabana Orchestra, with all of it composed by the leader. Chita Isar and Pepe Del Como sing a couple of the numbers and then the irrepressible Diosa Costello takes over the screen in the closing number. This is really lively and chock full of entertainment value. It is suitable as an addition to any type of program.

Maid Trouble (Funny)

RKO Radio (63,702) Leon Errol 18 mins.

Errol convinces a prospective business associate that he (Errol) knows everything about labor relations and to close a deal invites him home for dinner. The maid quits, however, and not to break down his associate's confidence in his ability to handle people, Errol's wife, Dorothy Granger, assumes the maid's job. In a mixup of mistaken identity when the maid returns and is mistaken for Errol's wife, a slapstick chase ensues, with the maid's husband wielding a gun and Errol going to every extreme to escape, including teetering on the outside ledge of his high apartment building. Much better than the usual Errol comedy.

Ski Aces (Excellent)

20th Century-Fox (6351) 8 mins.

Set in the grandeur of the Wasatch Mountain peaks at Alta, Utah, with Technicolor photography enhancing the natural beauty of the scenery, Ed Thorgersen's commentary accompanies breath-taking ski feats of the brothers Engen, Norwegian-Americans whose skill on skis is famous throughout the world of winter sports. The brothers go through every conceivable antic on skis, showing enough thrills to satisfy the most avid ski fanatic and supplying entertainment enough to satisfy anyone in a movie audience who has never even seen a ski.

Search 'Moon Maiden'

Reeves Espy, production head of PRC studios, now in New York, has announced his company's nation-wide search for "the most unusual type of beautiful girl" to portray the leading role in the company's "The Lost Continent," now being readied for production. Espy says that "Our girl must be much more than just a beautiful actress. To everyone in the world the cold, unreal beauty of the moon represents something different, but to everyone it is exotic and strange, alluring and compelling by its mysterious charm. This is the quality which will be typified by our Moon Maiden; the fascination of the completely unkown. To sum up the requirements of the part quickly—the Moon Maiden must be someone completely out of this world!"

"The Lost Continent," incidentally, tells the story about the first rocket trip to the moon!

Goldwyn Starts Building On Lab for Trick Effects

The structure will house elaborate equipment for the production of trick photographic effects under the direction of John Fulton, who is celebrating his 25th year as a special effects director and who did the work on the Danny Kaye dual role scenes in "Wonder Man," said to be the largest job of split-screen Technicolor ever attempted.

The building will be of concrete and glass, with floors set on bedrock piers to prevent vibration. Its equipment will include four printers and six cameras, mostly built to Fulton's secret specifications for handling miniatures, traveling and printed matter work and color processes.

The plot revolves around the bloody Lincoln County cattle wars in which Billy the Kid figured prominently.

CHECK-UP ON PRODUCT IN WORK

General Studio Productions Pace Slow, But Some Have Large Backlogs of Films; Strong Independent Operations at RKO Radio Are Revealed by Rathvon

UNITED ARTISTS Has Three Pictures Rolling, One Delayed; Raft's Illness May Delay Bogeaus Schedule—UA is running slightly behind last year's production tempo, but have a number of pictures in the process of being prepared. Sickness of Anne Baxter and Director Archie Mayo delayed shooting of Charles Rogers' "Angel On My Shoulder," but a speeded-up production schedule ought to make up the lost time. An attack of pleurisy put George Raft to bed and impeded production on "Mr. Ace and The Queen," Benedict Bogeaus film. "The Strange Woman," Hedy LaMarr starrer produced by Hunt Stromberg, continues to make headway and is nearing the last few weeks of shooting.

Samuel Goldwyn's "Glory for Me" was set back several weeks. It will probably go before the cameras at the end of this month or the first of March.

Buddy Rogers' and Ralph Cohn's Comet Productions pushed back their starting date on "Little Iodine," based on the comic strip, because of their inability to find a ten-year-old for the title role.

Andrew Stone produces and directs "The Bachelor's Daughters," all set to roll within the next three weeks. Stone also did the original story and screenplay. Latest additions to the cast include Jane Wyatt, Billie Burke, Adolph Menjou, Claire Trevor and Gail Russell.

David L. Loew's "A Night in Casablancha," starring the Marx Brothers, is undergoing the latest in a series of revisions. The producer has conducted a unique group of tests to determine actual audience reaction, having "sneaked" the picture before three different suburban theatre audiences to record laughs and success of gags.

Edward Small hopes to put "Bella Donna" before the cameras next month. The film will star Merle Oberon and Charles Korvin.

David O. Selznick's Vanguard Productions are still shooting on "Duel in the Sun," one of the most costly pictures ever made. In its present form the film runs four-and-one-half hours and will require considerable cutting to get it down to reasonable length.

Andy Clyde has been announced as Bill Boyd's sidekick in the "Hopalong Cassidy" series, to be produced by Lewis J. Rachmil.

PARAMOUNT Production Continues Slow; Next Betty Hutton Scheduled to Start—This time last year Paramount was ahead on shooting as compared to this week. Productions being shot, though, for the most part, are costly and require more care. "California" has ended its long siege of shooting, but will probably need a considerable period to adjust it for final release. "The Perfect Marriage," a Hal Wallis Production is winding up and should be ready for editing soon. "O.S.S.," recently started, is coming along nicely under the production guidance of ex-Lt. Col. Richard Maibaum. Another recent starter, the Pine-Thomas production, "Danger Street," is in its second week. Jane Withers gets the femme lead.

"Perils of Pauline" will be the next Betty Hutton super-duper, and ought to start late this month, according to studio plans.

One of the biggest Paramount films, "Where There's Life," will have William Bendix in the cast which is headed by Bob Hope and Signe Hasso. No starting date has been announced.

An ex-Paramount star, Stirling Hayden, reports to the studio April 1 to resume his career, interrupted by the war.

RKO RADIO Production at High Peak; Rathvon Reveals Strong Independent Operations—RKO is one of the leading lots in Hollywood in actual production at this time. The studio stacks up well with its excellent record of last year at a comparable date. The big Technicolor special, "Sinbad the Sailor," was set to start this week. "A Likely Story," young love comedy, is still rolling under the production of Richard Berger; "Crack Up," the psychological action drama starring Pat O'Brien, Clair Trevor and Herbert Marshall, goes into its ninth week; "Desirable Woman," the Joan Bennett starrer, is in its seventh week of shooting; and "Double Trouble," Jack Haley comedy-drama, is nearly ready for editing chores.

"A Child of Divorce" started this week, with Sharyn Moffett in the title role. Added scenes were shot last week for "Without Reservations," formerly titled "Thanks God, I'll Take It From Here."

Next month will find Liberty Productions' "It's a Wonderful Life," starring Jimmy Stewart, getting under way. The unit (Frank Capra, Samuel J. Briskin, William Wyler and George Stevens) plans nine pictures in the next three years for RKO release.

Michael Kanin is making final revisions on his screenplay of "Mexican Honeymoon," to be shot in two weeks. Robert Sparks will serve as executive producer.

N. Peter Rathvon, acting studio head, revealed the trend of the studio's production at a press conference, emphasizing the strong support independent producers releasing through RKO will give the company. Thirty-five per cent of RKO's output will come from such units as International, Hakim-Wood, Lasky-Leroy, Goldwyn and Disney. Disney is shooting "Make Mine Music" now, and will have it finished this month.

"The Showoff" got under way February 12; "Till the Clouds Roll By" is starting its second month of shooting; "Fiesta" has only a few weeks to go. "You Were There," starring Hepburn and Taylor, began last week and ought to be good for a long siege of shooting; and "Tenth Avenue Angel" starts today. "Angel" is being produced by Ralph Wheelwright and stars Margaret O'Brien with George Murphy and Angela Lansbury.

"The Beginning or the End," Sam Marx production, is shooting background scenes in New Mexico, Washington and the University of Chicago. Norman Taurog directs. The script, based on the atom bomb idea, is virtually completed.

The film will feature Butch Jenkins, whose most recent film, "Boy's Ranch," is getting a scoring treatment by Nathaniel Shilkret. "Devil Bat's Daughter," last regular feature completed by PRC, is being scored.

Last year at this time PRC had three pictures rolling, but 1946 has seen a definite lull in shooting.

"The Fabulous Joe," produced by Bebe Daniels and directed by Harve Foster, rolls March 4.

WARNER BROS. Far Behind Last Year's Production Schedule; One New Film Starts—This company has a tremendous backlog of pictures, which is a good reason for the lag in present shooting. "The Sentence" crew have been on location in San Francisco. "A Very Rich Man," which has been going 13 days, features Sydney Greenstreet in the main role.

Mrs. Showman Goes Studio Strolling

Dear Mr. Exhibitor's Wife:

Today we're going to drop in on the set of the Hal Wallis picture, "The Perfect Marriage," to say hello to Loretta Young and welcome David Niven (this is his first American picture after six years in the British Army) back to the fold.

They're shooting over at Paramount, and the studio tells me that today's scene takes place in the living room of a very sumptuous apartment. This is Loretta and Niven's home. According to the script, they have had a perfect marriage for ten years, when suddenly they find themselves drifting apart because of divergent interests.

Once we enter the stage we're surprised to find that a completely furnished apartment has been set, for this is contrary to custom. There's a very beautiful modern bedroom, a kitchen, dining room, library and last, the living room where the action takes place. A rehearsal is in progress, so we locate a secluded corner where we can sit back and watch the proceedings.

Loretta and Niven are having a quarrel. She is seated behind a desk, playing solitaire, while he paces up and down in front of her. He accuses her of being a part-time business woman, part-time housekeeper, part-time wife, part-time mother (they have a child of nine) and goes on to say "the tiddlewinks you do, you call work . . . etc., etc."

At his words she gets very angry, so she throws aside the cards, jumps up and proceeds to tell him off. "When you choose your next wife," she says, "be sure to see that she hasn't any of my faults." . . . and then proceeds to slap his face.

We had been told on our way in, about the joke the crew and Niven were playing on Loretta. Before the rehearsal started, Niven had put some false teeth in his mouth and these he was to drop out when Loretta slapped his face. Sure enough, that's exactly what he does, much to her amazement and everybody's enjoyment.

The merriment that results upsets the action for a few minutes, but since Director Lewis Allen was in on the joke, it doesn't take him long to get everything adjusted again. In fact, it's shortly after that that he okays the "take" . . . which releases everyone for a short time, and gives us an opportunity to speak with Loretta and then offer our best wishes to Niven before they're called back to work.

Until next week.

Bobby-Soxers Back, Gable's Got 'Em

Frankie crooned and they swooned. Van grinned and they wanted to mother him. But ohhhh. That Gable!

Dodo Miller's dark eyes were dreamy in the dawn's early light outside Radio City Music Hall this morning.

"Oh, Frankie and Van are just kids," cried Dodo, who is 18 and lives at 308 W. 82nd St. "At least, Gable's a man!"

Hundreds in Line.

Yes, Van and Frankie. There were hundreds of these fickle femmes in line for tickets to the premiere of the Gable-Garson scorcher, "Adventure." And even though that he-man has been off the screen for three and one-half years.

"The only thing I don't like is Garson's got him. It isn't fair." That was Doris Rovinsky, 17, Washington Irving High School senior, of 1635 Union St., Bklyn., doing the wailing.

Demure little Marjorie Cooper of Butler, N. J., looked sleepy. She had been in the line since 8:30 a. m.

She's Glad.

"I'm just glad he's back," said shyly, "I worked all nigh nursing. Then I came ove see Gable."

Doris Monthie, 19 W. 94th tossed her head. "He's so cas about his acting, definitely favorite actor," she observ loftily. "He's more of a man th Frankie."

One trio of giggling girls co fided: "We're hooky players. W took off from work."

The tall blonde explained, "We don't do it often. Just to see Gable. And we don't do any of that swooning stuff. We just like him 'cause he's a wonderful actor."

Tough Guy.

Arcky Pasquarello, 17, 1354 63rd St., Bklyn., was just beside herself with anticipation. "He's tough," she said of Gable. "He's got that look. Huh?"

Gloria Constantino of 1270 54th St., Bklyn., sighed rapturously. "He can make love just like the guys I don't know."

Ex-Maj. Clark Gable, who started his 3½-year army career as a private and who flew five combat missions over Europe and won the Air Medal, was released by the Army Air Forces last May, but this is his first picture.

And it wasn't just the girls who turned out to welcome Gable back this morning.

"I want to see what he's like after coming out of the Army," explained a faithful admirer, Edward Wexler, of 112 Ave. F Bklyn

Mission for Wife.

Next to him in line was Mr. J Goldstein, a visitor from Montreal, Canada. "My wife's still sleeping," he said sadly, "I'm t get the tickets. She wants to se Gable."

Mary Ribaudo, 17, of 361 W. 27t St., was way back in the line stalled at Rockefeller Plaza. "Fo Gable," she said, "I'd stand fou blocks."

TRADE OBSERVATIONS

WELCOME TREND. It is becoming quite clear that a revival of activity by exhibitor organizations is now afoot. After war years of restricted facilities for travel as well as the manpower shortages which kept exhibitors pinned to their theatre offices, there appears a chance for movement to central locations by numbers of theatre owners and the availability of time to attend to these matters of mutual interest.

This is a good thing for the business. The exhibitors should be more active in an organizational way. They can do themselves and the industry a lot of good by concerted action on matters of constructive design to permit progress of the business as well as to accomplish the very important work of protecting the theatres against unfair taxes and other legislation that is inimical to the operation of these community institutions.

The forthcoming meet in St. Louis of the Theatre Activities Committee to establish an organization for mutual welfare of the exhibitors looks like a most promising start for these revived exhibitor organizational movements.

It is the consensus of the industry—and one in which this page heartily concurs—that National Allied's election of the dynamic Jack Kirsch of Chicago to be its president was a really forward-looking move and one that promises a great deal for the progress of that organization as a force for the potential constructive action which conditions in the industry make necessary for the present and near-future. Jack Kirsch is capable of doing a terrific job and we are betting he will do it.

Ed Kuykendall in a statement to STR this week declares that the MPTOA is preparing for a vigorous program of action by its organization and its individual members.

This promised energy by exhibitor organizations appears as a most hopeful development. All of the exhibitor groups have a great opportunity to do really important things for the theatre owners and the industry as a whole. Here's hoping they measure up to the job there is for them to do.

EASY DOES IT. People who read the papers and keep tabs on such things are saying that the figures on unemployment claims in various big cities are showing such a sharp rise that the public purse-string is rather certain to show signs of tightening up. At the same time there are plenty of indicators, declare these same observers, that when things get going on a real reconversion program of producing civilian goods in the quantities that the market can absorb there will be employment that will be higher than before the war—some predict as much as 25 per cent higher than pre-war. These are things that everybody must watch for himself and there is no wish or disposition in this corner to do any prognosticating. However, the people who read their papers carefully seem to be saying that it's a good idea to be careful now, but get ready for big things when the present production log-jam breaks up. In either case, take it easy—for easy does it, they say.

LET'S HAVE MORE OF SAME. Our technical editor informs us that an invention by Dr. Alfred Goldsmith (as reported elsewhere in this issue) makes possible a future application of electronics to correction of acoustical faults in place of the conventional means of hanging up drapes here and stretching heavier carpet there, and tacking up sound absorbent tile or plaster boards somewhere else. What a relief that will be.

We can, in the post-war era—which, incidentally, is still ahead—do with more of that sort of improvement. Being entirely neutral we shan't say just what. However, we have a pal who attends picture shows and knows good projection from bad. It is the opinion of this party that a projector so built that the bloomin' thing would collapse and quit altogether when, after long wear or lack of care, it had passed the precision stage would be a good thing for the movie fans. That way—the argument set forth goes—no theatre could go on using—or misusing, to be precise about it—a projector that developed old-age faults.

AT YOUR SERVICE. Speaking of the technical phase of our business, the machinery and equipment, as well as the picture on the screen, is something the showman should watch closely. We offer theatremen every four weeks a service which can be of the utmost value to all alert owners and managers, as well as technical men of the theatre.

This special service will be found in action in another part of this issue. We recommend that you read that section if you are not already among the vast majority of our subscribers who make it regular practice to give special attention to our Motion Picture Theatre Equipment and Maintenance features as they appear periodically every four weeks.

Supreme Court Ruling Rocks The Industry

Decision in Jackson Park Case Under Close Study by Industry and D. of J.

Full impact of the United States Supreme Court decision awarding owners of the Jackson Park Theatre of Chicago $360,000 damages under the Sherman Act and found evidences of price-fixing and run-control conspiracy against 5 major distributors and 3 theatre circuits in the Chicago area, had not been felt throughout the nation this week, but exhibitors apparently were not rushing into court with their troubles because of it.

While Thomas A. McConnell, attorney for the Jackson Park Theatre, said he would seek an injunction to set aside present clearance and sales policies, and while Attorney General Tom Clark in Washington said he would not be surprised to see more suits on this subject develop, the average exhibitor seemed inclined to study the court's decision before acting.

Attorneys for the defendants concerned—Balaban and Katz, RKO Radio Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.; Warner Bros. Theatres, Inc.; Loew's, Inc., 20th Century-Fox, Inc.; Vitagraph, Inc.; Paramount Pictures Corp.—apparently were studying the opinion for future action. Ordinarily a petition for rehearing would be filed, but the strong majority in the court—7-1 (Justice Jackson abstaining, Justice Frankfurter dissenting)—makes such a petition difficult.

The owners of the Chicago subsequent run Jackson Park Theatre (Florence Bigelow, Marion B. Koerber, John E. Bloom and William Bloom) had petitioned that the Jackson Park lost $125,692 in a five-year period from 1937 to 1942. The loss was claimed on the grounds that duals went into effect during this period and that the Jackson Park could no longer get first-run product in its zone because circuit-affiliated theatres took up all the product. Cited as proof was the rival circuit-operated Maryland Theatre.

Also claimed was the charge that the Jackson Park could not buy first runs in the zone regardless of price offered.

The suit had been filed originally in the federal court at Chicago where a jury apparently sustained the charges and brought in a damage verdict of $120,000 which the judge raised to $360,000 under the triple damage provision of the Sherman act. An appeal by the distributors and the circuits resulted in a reversal by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

The case then went to the Supreme Court which this week found for the plaintiff.

The opinion, written by Justice Harlan Stone, read in part:

"The gist of the complaint is that by reason of the conspiracy petitioners were prevented from securing pictures for exhibition in their theatre until after the preferred exhibitors had been able to show them in the earlier and more desirable runs, and that petitioners have thus been discriminated against in the distribution of feature films in favor of competing theatres owned or controlled by some of the respondents.

"There was evidence from which the (Chicago federal court) jury could have found that respondents maintained in the Chicago district, by a conspiracy among themselves, a discriminatory system of distributing motion pictures for showing in successive weeks of release.

"There is evidence that respondent distributors and exhibitors conspired to give to the conspirator-controlled or affiliated theatres preferential playing positions in the release system over the positions allotted to independent competing theatres, with the results that the petitioners' theatre was unable to obtain feature films until the first week of 'general release' or 10 weeks after the end of the Loop run. By that time most of the respondent exhibitors' theatres, with several of which petitioners' theatre competes, and which enjoyed the prior 'A,' 'B' or 'C' pre-release runs, had finished their showings. Regardless of the price offered for rental of film, the respondent exhibitors, in execution of the conspiracy, refused to release films to petitioners' theatres except for the first week of 'general release.'

"Evidence was introduced in the course of the trial tending to show that respondents conspired to maintain the release system as part of a conspiracy to maintain minimum admission prices to be charged by exhibitors generally. This proof indicated that the

Jackson Park Case In Brief

The Jackson Park Theatre claimed that it lost over $120,000 when rival Maryland and other circuit affiliated theatres went dual and absorbed all the first runs in the same zone. Owners of the plaintiff theatre claimed conspiracy. A federal court jury in Chicago brought in an award of $120,000 damages which the judge multiplied by three ($360,000) using the triple damage clause of the Sherman act.

Defendants appealed and the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the decision.

Plaintiff went to the Supreme Court which on Feb. 25 gave the Jackson Park Theatre owners the $360,000 damages and found that a price fixing conspiracy as well as a conspiracy to control runs had apparently been entered into.

Jackson Park Theatre Attorney Thomas A. McConnell said he would seek an injunction to set aside the present sales and clearance systems and to bring pictures into an open market bidding basis.

Defendant attorneys were silent on future plans.

April 16 Date Set for Schine 'Divest' Hearing

Federal Judge John Knight announced in Buffalo this week that April 16 had been set for a hearing on the government's plan to divest the Schine circuit of some of its theatres in accordance with a section of the court's decision in the federal anti-trust suit against Schine.

The plan in brief calls for a divestiture of some Schine houses, but does not break up the circuit. It reduces the circuits buying power and prohibits it from entering booking or buying fields. It also prohibits the circuit from becoming partners in new theatre ventures or indulging in activities that might lead to expansion.

Informed sources said the plan was intended not to be rigid but to restore competitive situations in many localities. It calls for a trusteeship to handle the sale of those houses which must be disposed and would give the trustees full access to the theatres, their records and the like to determine actual business and other needed data. To all appearances Schine will have to get rid of houses only in those localities where at present the circuit has no competition.

Chicago Power Rate Cut

Theatres in Chicago will get a four per cent electric rate cut due to the recent Illinois Commerce Commission's ruling that the Edison Commonwealth Company and its subsidiaries reduce its rates by that amount on March 1.

Heart Attack Fatal to James M. Brennan, 59

Funeral services for James M. Brennan, 59-year-old supervisor of the RKO New York Metropolitan and New Jersey theatres, were to be held Friday (March 1) in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament. Interment will be in Syracuse.

Brennan, who died of heart attack on Feb. 26, came to RKO in 1919 as manager in Trenton and rose to the post he held at the time of his death.

N. J. Allied Eyes New Bills

Possible activity by Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey against ten proposed legislative bills was seen this week as it was announced there would be a meeting to discuss legislative matters at the Stacy-Trent Hotel in Trenton on March 11. One of the measures would prohibit gambling in New Jersey and if passed would affect Bingo nights.

Beg Poddin'

Deploring a misinterpretation of information from London under which the New York office of the Motion Picture Association of which he is president issued a statement to the effect that J. Arthur Rank had discriminated against American films in making up programs for presentation of movies to delegates to the UNO conference in London, Eric A. Johnston this week cabled to the British producer declaring that constant effort to improve relations between Great Britain and the United States should be made in the interest of effecting world reconstruction and peace.

Johnston's cable was in reply to word from Rank questioning the MPA statement.

"Our association made a mistake in saying that you refused to show American films," Johnston replied to Rank, "and I am glad to correct it publicly. Our New York office misinterpreted information received from our London representative. I deplore incidents which mar relations between our countries and our industries. We must constantly strive to improve these relations."

Peaceful Picketing Set for Halloway's Gem, St. Louis

By agreement of counsel, reached in St. Louis, the St. Louis Theatrical Brotherhood, Local No. 6, will continue to picket Henry Halloway's Gem Theatre in St. John's Station, St. Louis County, while the house operates with a non-union projectionist in the booth.

Through this agreement the union will maintain two pickets who must not molest, intimidate or interfere with patrons or prospective patrons of the house. Also, they must take license numbers of patrons' automobiles or photograph patrons to use their pictures in the labor paper.

Halloway had sought an injunction to stop the picketing claiming that pickets were telling children "there is a man in the theatre who will cut off your ears."

Admissions Low But Fans Plentiful for Brazil Movies

Despite the fact that its admission prices are the lowest of the Latin Americas, Brazil offers a strong volume of business for motion pictures, Enrique Baes, Brazil general manager for United Artists, declared in a New York trade press conference.

Baes flew from Rio to the states to place his son in a Georgia school. He then proceeded to New York to celebrate his 25th anniversary with United Artists.

"The lowest admission prices of all Latin America," he declared, "are in Brazil. Deluxe theatres charge there the equivalent of 30 cents in America." Some admissions go as low as 5 cents, he said.

Jutkovitz, RKO Renew

Renewal of a 25-year partnership between RKO Theatres and the Jutkovitz Brothers in Far Rockaway was jointly announced in New York this week by Al Jutkovitz and RKO President Malcolm Kingsberg. The announcement reveals that a new 2500-seater on the site of the Rockaway RKO Columbia will be constructed for RKO operation. The partnership deal covers operation of the Columbia and Strand theatres.

Exhibitor Organization Action Due for Upsurge, Kuykendall

A rebirth of exhibitor association activity before the end of the year was predicted in Columbus, Mississippi, this week by Ed Kuykendall, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"The war, transportation difficulties and the consent decree trials all united to hold back any exhibitor activity," the MPTOA President told SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW.

"Exhibitors during the war were, like the rest of the country, most interested in the prosecution of the war and in doing the job they set out to do. That they did the job so well is one thing they could be proud of.

"Then too, the questions of transportation and hotel accommodations prevented many of the national organizations from getting together. Conventions for the most part were out. Some state meetings continued to be held, but these were limited by the fact that the exhibitor had to get in and out of the city where they were held in one day. Larger states, such as Texas, had, I understand, to forego even this.

Anti-Trust Decision Awaited

"There is no doubt that the consent decree froze a good deal of activity also. While the matter was and is in court, such subjects as block booking, clearance, etc., were tied up subject to court ruling and there was little point in trying to take any direct action until the court had decided.

"There is ground for the belief that this final ruling will soon be handed down, and that the way will be cleared for exhibitor discussion and action.

"MPTOA has always believed in state exhibitor autonomy. We believe the exhibitor is better acquainted with and more fully understands his own state's problems as it relates to the exhibitor. MPTOA is always ready to cooperate and coordinate the efforts of exhibitors in everything that has a national interest."

No Import Licenses, No U. S. Films for French

Existing trade treaties between France and the United States must be made to work out, since the matter is of the highest importance in the effect it is having in French film circles, Henri Klarsfeld, head of Paramount's Belgium, France and French North Africa organization, declared in New York this week.

Klarsfeld who arrived by air from Paris for home office conferences with Paramount International President George Weltner, declared that the French wanted American films very badly but were deprived of them since the American companies had only a few old films and had to hold back new pictures due to needed lack of import licenses.

M.O.D. Collections May Top '45

March of Dimes Chairman Nick Schenck this week appealed to exhibitors to rush their reports of collection so that the amounts could be tabulated and the "money put to work."

Schenck said that as long as a general tabulation could not be made, the use of the money received in the recent campaign would be delayed. Meanwhile available figures showed a general increase in donations taken in theatres over 1945. A few such reports, with the increase over 1945 shown in parenthesis, follow:

Standard Theatres, Milwaukee, $12,466 ($3028); Neighborhood Circuit, Richmond, Va., $17,955 ($2416); Randforce Circuit, Brooklyn, $42,534 ($6798); Worth Theatre, Fort Worth, Tex., $4103 ($1252); Astor, Reading, Pa., $4367 ($2003); Paramount, Brooklyn, $5124 ($1223).

See Studios Releasing Agencies as Independent Production Progresses

Hollywood history is being made with a current progressive swing toward independent production. Some competent observers predict that it is not impossible for studios to eventually become mere releasing agencies for a host of independent producers in the manner of the United Artists operation.

The development, gathering momentum only in recent years, is fast approaching a crescendo. Latest bigwig independent announced is Charles Einfield, who will release through RKO Radio.

Of importance to exhibitors, distributors and moviegoers, the new trend means that quality of production should increase because of the greater care naturally exercised by individual units in producing their own pictures. With a producer's money and personal reputation at stake, he is more likely to evince proportionately more effort on his production than if he were a salaried employe.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is the only studio thus far unaffected by the current trend. Warners have the Joseph Bernhard-Milton Sperling United States Pictures and Mervyn LeRoy's Arrowhead Productions. Paramount includes Pine-Thomas and Hal Wallis on its independent producers list. PRC Pictures, Inc., is virtually a net of independents, including Alexander-Stern, James Burkett, Josef Berne, Robert Tansey and Pat Di Cicco's Imperial Productions.

Monogram's independent producers are Roy Del Ruth, the King Brothers, Sam Katzman, Great Western Productions (Scott Dunlap) and others. Republic has W. Lee Wilder, Steve Sekely, Ben Hecht and Walter Colmes. Columbia includes Mutual Productions (Leslie Fenton-Fred MacMurray), Phil L. Ryan Prods., J.E.M. Productions (Jerry Giesler, Edward Neals, Milton Holmes) and Sidney Buchman Pictures.

Twentieth Century-Fox has Edward L. Alperson's "Alson" Productions and Sol Wurtzel's unit. Universal's independent units include Jack Skirball-Bruce Manning, Diana Productions (Walter Wanger, Joan Bennett, Fritz Lang), Mark Hellinger, Michael Todd and Walter Wanger Productions.

Next to United Artists, which is solely an independent organization using the name "United Artists" for releasing purposes to bind nearly 20 different producers together, RKO ranks highest. Following the lead recently indicated by N. Peter Rathvon, company president, this studio can be expected to better its present setup of 35 per cent of production coming from independents. Its roster includes Liberty Productions (Sam Briskin, Frank Capra, George Stevens, William Wyler), Samuel Goldwyn, Walt Disney, Frank Ross, Lasky-LeRoy, Robert Riskin, Hakim-Wood, Tarzan Productions (Sol Lesser), and Rainbow Productions.

The most pressing problem confronting independent producers today is the lack of studio space. Samuel Goldwyn, himself an independent producer, recently announced that he was closing his studio to any productions other than his own. A simultaneous announcement came from the RKO Pathe studio in Culver City, which signified that no more independent commitments are being made. Indicative of the difficulty is Edward Small, who after searching for space to produce his forthcoming "Bella Donna," sold the property to International.

With the help situation being what it is, Betty Hensler, manager of the Des Moines, Ia., Uptown Theatre, recently decided to do something that would give tone and dignity to the theatre. She hired as an usher a man who was a little older than the others but whom she felt would be just what the doctor ordered for the dignity angle. At a staff meeting she stressed that an employe should always refer to a patron as a lady or a gentleman while in their presence, and what is more, said employe himself should always be a gentleman. All went well till that same evening the new "dignified" usher approached her with two patrons and said: "Miss Hensler, these ladies have lost a compact and I've looked all over hell for it and can't find it."

Form Advance Units To Exploit 'Henry V'

SMPE Expansion Program Outlined

Increased financial support of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers by both major and independent producers makes possible the expanded program of activity and personnel the society will undertake shortly, SMPE President Don E. Hyndman announced in New York this week.

The five-point engineering program which the Society will follow will include practices related to production, distribution, exhibition; relation of television to motion pictures, standardization procedures to bring greater efficiency and economy in all phases of the industry; supervision of world-wide standardization to facilitate international distribution and exhibition of American films; correlation and assembling of essential reference books on production, distribution, exhibition, theatre construction, television and other subjects and practices relating to the motion picture industry.

Among the new personnel to be added will be an engineering secretary, a staff engineer, a technical librarian, a technical stenographer and clerical help. An increase in membership, based on the wide number of inquiries the society is receiving about its work, is also anticipated.

Those attending the conference which formulated the plans for expansion were: Hyndman, an Eastman Kodak associate; Dr. Alfred E. Goldsmith, past SMPE president; Frank E. Cahill, Jr., of Warner Bros., chairman of the SMPE's Atlantic Coast section; Earle X. Sponable, 20th Century-Fox; Henry Anderson, Paramount; Arthur S. Dickinson of the Johnston office; W. H. Offenhauser of CBS; C. R. Keith, Western Electric; Dave B. Joy, National Carbon; James Frank, Jr., National Theatre Supply; J. A. Maurer, SMPE engineering vice-president; Harry Smith, Jr., SMPE executive secretary; H. E. White, Eastman Kodak; Pierre Mortz, Bell Telephone Laboratories.

RALLY TO THE FLAG OF MERCY!

The American Red Cross again has called on the showmen of the motion picture industry to aid in collecting necessary funds. Never before have the needs of the Red Cross been greater than they are today and all of us must rally to the support of this great humanitarian organization in its vital post-war work. It is a challenge we must meet just as we did during the war. In those dreadful years Exhibitors all over our nation supported every worthy cause with a zeal that won them lasting admiration. They were backed-up by the men and women in our studios and in the distribution departments, and their united efforts brought successful fulfillment to every task set before our industry.

Today we must continue to carry on the patriotic work we are so well equipped to accomplish. At home we face the problem of rehabilitating our returned soldiers and bringing sorely needed help to our wounded men, bed-ridden in hospitals. All over the world millions of men, women and children, who have felt the cruel impact of war, are looking to America for relief and the Red Cross will play a big part in this important job.

If we are to have the peaceful world we so earnestly pray for, we cannot let down the Red Cross now. Its flag is a symbol of mercy to all who behold it and for those who need food and shelter it means life and hope for the future.

Exhibitors, everywhere, organize your forces now to deliver the great sum of money so urgently needed by The American Red Cross!

The motion picture industry will not fail this great cause!

No Tax Cut in Sight

Making no bones about the fact that he would oppose a cut in luxury taxes —which include federal admission taxes—Rep. Robert Doughton (D., N.C.), chairman of the powerful House Ways and Means Committee, declared in Washington this week that the federal budget is so huge that further reduction of tax sources cannot be made. Doughton said he felt the American public did not wish "luxury taxes cut now" and made it clear that he considered movies a luxury. He also feels that the cut in income taxes prevent consideration of any further tax paring.

Spotlight 'Heart Fund' In Tribute to Cherry

More than 400 registrants gave evidence of their appreciation of the services of James O. Cherry during his two terms as chief barker of the Variety Clubs of Texas at a testimonial dinner in his honor at Dallas last Friday (February 22).

In addition to being a tribute to Cherry, the event was a public relations occasion of wide scope. On a mammoth dias were nearly 100 persons of local and state prominence, each of whom was introduced by Wm. O'Donnell, and who followed the proceeding with close attention.

Cherry told of his main activity—the creation of the Variety Foundation, designed for the support of Boys Ranch of Copperas Cove. He said the foundation now has a fund of $300,000.00, which he called the Heart Fund of Variety. He reported 53 boys now resident at the Ranch and that the aim is for a $1,000,000.00 fund and 200 boys.

The clinching compliment to Cherry was presentation to him by Bob O'Donnell of a life membership in the Variety Clubs of America.

Men Nix Duals; Like Westerns 'If They Don't Sing,' Survey Reveals

The butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker and his brothers under the skin have their say about the movies in the report of a survey conducted by the Motion Picture Councils in communities throughout the nation that was made public this week.

The survey, which was "for men only" covered:

Attendance? Yes, Mr. American goes to the movies from three times a week to twice a year, but sometimes he goes "only when a really good movie is available."

How does he make up his mind what he wants to see? Well, he may decide from a newspaper or a magazine review, from the local news, from what he heard the boys on the job say about the film, or maybe he got the idea from a radio broadcast or the recommendation of his local motion picture council. But . . .

Mostly he goes because the little woman tells him what she wants to see, or if he isn't married, he goes where the girl friend or the lady he is being a gentleman to for the evening wants to go. If he's a father and junior or junior miss has an idea, well you know that answer without being told. All in all most men seem to feel they "don't have much of a choice in the matter," to quote one of the frank ones.

Relaxation? Most of the men queried prefer a movie to relax after a busy day than a game of bridge. At least one man preferred poker to the movies though.

Double features? They don't seem to like them. (Some answers: "Too long"; "Divides interest"; "One picture is good and the other second class"; "Four hour bills are too long."

What they like? Pictures with deep sentiments, any "clean" story well directed with an interesting plot; comedy; "plays written for the movies rather than those taken from books"; action; "old-fashioned Westerns as long as they don't sing." A few chose pictures for directors, other chose them for cast. Most feel that the pictures men see are those made to please women.

The cross section of manly opinion on movies was procured by individual ballot, panel and audience participation discussion based upon 12 questions prepared by the National Council of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

N. Y. Exhibitors Gird To War on New City Tax

New York City's proposed city amusement tax remained in an undecided state this week as a group of exhibitors was reliably reported to have created favorable impressions in at least two important quarters with a logical attack on the proposed five per cent admissions tax.

Though official comments were not forthcoming, it was reliably learned that exhibitors claimed the amusement tax was discriminatory and singled out motion pictures for excessive taxes which other industries did not pay.

By way of emphasizing the alleged discrimination against theatres, exhibitors declared that the city tax consultants had recommended a five per cent tax on jewelry and cosmetics but had specified that the city tax should go on only after the present federal tax on such merchandise came off.

Many exhibitors were also said to claim that they are not seeking a reduction of taxes like other businesses and that they realize the city needs the money, but that they object to being singled out to pay from four to five times the amount of taxes paid by other business. They want an amusement tax, if passed, to be on a parity with these other taxes.

Politically, the tax situation is still confused, with the proposed taxes serving as a football for both Democrats and Republicans. The tax bill had not reached the legislature by mid-week.

Skouras Heads Cancer Drive Set for April 21-28

Motion picture theatres will be urged to aid the national campaign of the American Cancer Society to raise funds for research and therapy and to broadcast information about Cancer during the week of April 21-28, it was announced in New York last Tuesday by Charles Skouras, president of National Theatres, who is serving as national chairman of the industry committee which is cooperating in the drive.

Charles Skouras

Skouras said that while every means will be taken to appeal to theatres to join the drive and that the utmost cooperation of the industry will be sought by his committee, there will be no demand made that theatres make collections or otherwise raise funds for the cause. Skouras said that his committee will work entirely toward voluntary efforts by theatres and the industry; that those who do not wish to participate in raising funds might assist in he educational campaign. Authorities claim that cancer will be responsible for the deaths of 17,000,000 of the 135,000,000 people now living in the U. S. unless measures are taken to curb the disease through the spread of information about the malady and provision for research and facilities for care of those stricken with cancer.

20th-Fox Pays Dividends

Dividends of $1.12½ per share on the outstanding prior preferred stock of 20th Century-Fox were this week announced payable as of March 15, 1946 to stockholders who held the shares at the close of business March 8, 1946. A quarterly cash dividend of 37½ cents per share on the outstanding convertible preferred stock and a quarterly cash dividend of 75 cents per share on the outstanding common stock was also announced.

Quoting the Decision

Justice Stone in the court's opinion:

"Evidence was introduced in the course of the trial tending to show that respondents (5 majors and 2 circuits) conspired to maintain the release system as part of a conspiracy to maintain minimum admission prices to be charged by exhibitors generally. This proof indicated that the object of this conspiracy was to make it possible to maintain high admission prices In the Loop by restricting the price competition of subsequent run theatres."

Justice Frankfurter, dissenting:

"Our real question is whether the respondents' violation of the Sherman law illegally injured the petitioners. This necessarily involves substantial proof that the petitioners' business would have been more profitable if the distribution of movie films in Chicago had been a free-for-all. . . ."

Find "Price Fixing"

object of this conspiracy was to make it possible to maintain high admission prices in the Loop theatres by restricting the price competition of the subsequent run theatres.

"There was this evidence tending to show that the release system and the price fixing system were each an integral part of an unlawful conspiracy to give the Loop theatres the advantages of a first-run protected from low-price competition.

"The evidence tended to show that when single features were being shown, exhibitors who had playing positions ahead of petitioners in selecting films out of these which their rental contracts allowed them to show, did not exhibit all the films distributed so that despite their inferior playing position, petitioners were able to exhibit pictures which had not been shown elsewhere.

"With the advent of double featuring, theatres with playing positions ahead of petitioners' used nearly all of the films so distributed, and the pictures which petitioners were able to exhibit in the first week of general release, by reasons of the distribution system, had had prior showing in nearly every case."

Part of Justice Frankfurter's dissent reads:

"Our real question is whether the respondents' violation of the Sherman law illegally injured the petitioners. This necessarily involves substantial proof that the petitioners' business would have been more profitable if the distribution of movie films in Chicago had been a free-for-all, and if no factor of the scheme that constituted an illegal conspiracy had been in operation, than under the conditions that actually prevailed.

"Specifically, one feature of the conspiracy was stipulated rentals by distributors in furnishing films to exhibitors. The record appears devoid of proof that if competitive conditions had prevailed, distributors would not have made rental contracts with their respective exhibiting affiliates to the serious disadvantage of independents like the petitioners. They might have individually have done so and not have offended the Sherman law."

Dr. Lubin Studies New Allied Checking Plan

Allied States Association's checking plan, said to be a radical departure from present checking methods in that it would substitute bonding and audits for physical presence of a checker, was being studied this week in New York by Dr. Isidore Lubin of Confidential Reports.

Lubin told SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW that he had a conference with Col. H. H. Cole of Allied but that the plan had only been outlined to him at that time and that Col. Cole told him he did not have a copy of it with him but had submitted copies to the distributors who use Confidential Reports. The copy Lubin now has was sent him by a distributor.

An informed source, which favors the plan, said that "it might work and again it might not, since it is radically different." The source said that the only solution to checking in his opinion was to eliminate playing pictures on percentage.

Electronic Correction for Acoustical Faults

Theatre men who have to worry about acoustics and treat their houses with absorbents to take the echo out will have plain sailing in the future when the recent invention of Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, past president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, is commercially applied.

The invention, covered by patent, makes possible the use of electronics to eliminate echoes and other acoustical faults. It establishes electronic circuits that are capable of introducing synthetic reverberation to sound. These circuits can be incorporated in the theatre's amplifying equipment.

Present day tracks are recorded with normal reverberations. Played in an abnormally reverberant theatre, they sometimes sound "off" because the total reverberation is too great. By means of this electronic invention, "dead" studios could be used for recording and as much or as little reverberation induced as would be be required by the controls installed in the projection room. Thus the use of this apparatus in the theatre would—in conjunction with a "dead" sound track—accomplish the same effect as installing acoustical surfaces in defective auditoriums, Dr. Goldsmith claims.

The only bug: It costs too much to be practical right now.

Percentage Fraud Suits Filed in Maryland

First of what informed sources say will be a series of percentage fraud suits that will spread across the nation were filed in Maryland this week when major distributors entered 18 suits against four exhibitors in the federal district court of Baltimore.

The suits, in brief, charge that the exhibitors maintained incorrect records in order to pay less percentage to the distributors and ask for punitive damages in addition to recovery of the amounts said to have been lost through the allegedly false reports.

Involved are:

Loew's 20th Century-Fox, Universal, Columbia, Paramount, Warner Bros.—suing Morris and Benjamin Flaks who operates the Baltimore and Highland theatres.

Loew's, Universal, Warner Bros., United Artists, Paramount, 20th Century-Fox—suing Louis Tunick who operates the Baltimore Brooklyn and Patapsco theatres and the Arbutus Hollywood.

Loew's, 20th Century-Fox, Universal, Columbia, Paramount, Warner Bros.—suing W. J. Connel who operates the New theatres in Aberdeen and Elkton.

Bader, whose resignation is effective immediately, is president of AMPA.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

THE THEATRE PASS, USE IT WISELY

By Jack Jackson

The pass list can be a factor of prime importance in promoting the right kind of goodwill or it can be merely a means of cheapening the theatre—it all depends on how the management of the individual theatre or theatres employs the gratuity for purposes of impressing people with the high honor bestowed when a complimentary ticket is issued to them. Here the subject of the pass and the know-how for making it serve the ends of good theatre management is discussed by a seasoned and accomplished showman who cites facts to prove his points.

How large is your annual pass list, Mr. Showman? How many trip passes are issued weekly to your theatre? How many of your employes have authority to sign passes? And, finally, how long is it since you gave the lists a thorough going over? The disbursement of trip passes should be carefully scrutinized every week and the annual list examined for deadwood at least semi-annually.

This writer does not agree with the many who consider the pass as a necessary evil of the theatre. The pass is very seldom necessary and only evil on occasions of our own making. I'd say that the theatre pass bears striking resemblance to the two-tempered gods of the Aztecs who were benign or beastly according to conditions existing within their respective domains. The pass can be—and frequently it is—the theatre's best friend. And, Janus-like, it can be—and still more frequently is—the theatre's worst enemy.

Indiscriminately distributed, the pass is a Frankenstein that eventually will turn upon and destroy its maker. But, adroitly handled and cautiously disbursed, it can build good will and patronage faster than Donald Duck can wiggle his feathered posterior. It all depends on how; to whom; and for what the pass is given.

There are circumstances where the promiscuous distribution of passes—for a limited period—bears promise of mediocre box-office returns, such as the inauguration of some new and unique policy; to welcome the mass employe roster of some new industry, etc., etc. But, even in such instances, careful study invariably will disclose that a well-planned paid advertising campaign will attain the desired goal, attract a better quality audience, protect the dignity and business prestige of the theatre and in addition, show a satisfying profit over and above its cost when compared to the revenue sacrificed through pass distribution.

Elevate the Theatre Pass

A pass is the highest favor it is possible for you to bestow on those who perform favors or render services that further the interests of the theatre. Its use to compensate for trivial service—or no service at all as is frequently the case—repudiates any implied expression of appreciation for major favors and relegates it to the undesirable category of trading stamps and box tops.

It is within your power to elevate your theatre pass to the point where its possession is a mark of distinction to be sought after and striven for—to be valued far above its intrinsic worth—as an honor bestowed only on persons of consequence in the community or those whose interest in the theatre has been proved beyond question. This can be accomplished by holding a tight rein on pass distribution and making any and all recipients of the gratuities fully aware of the fact that the favor conferred is really a personal invitation from you to spend a couple of hours in pleasant recreation as your guest. In this way you give the pass strong relationship to an invitation to play games at your club, be your guest at some pleasure resort, or enjoy other personal favors that everybody appreciates and remembers.

But, you can't do this if you allow the wife to give a handful to the butcher in return for a preferred cut of meat, nor if one of your employes is selling them at the poolroom six for a quarter, nor if you yourself are giving them by the dozen to the garbage man for emptying the trash cans. Remember I'm not talking about "kid" passes. Be as liberal as you wish with them for special shows—after all they are the coming adult patrons of your theatre and it pays to get them into the habit of theatre going—but even the kids should be made to earn their theatre admission.

I'd like to tell you a couple of actual experiences with passes:

Some years ago the writer took charge of a theatre where the previous management had been so liberal that passes were printed in different colors to enable the doorman to quickly determine whether they were good for two, four, six or eight people. No, I'm not kidding. It happened. The procedure was so contrary to sensible business practice that it required three weeks of confused reckoning to detect the reason for the discrepancy between business expectancy—judged by seats occupied—and cash receipts. To break this untenable situation it was necessary to discontinue all card distribution even for billing and other services that had been compensated with passes, and to have all pass holders interview the manager before admittance. The manager informed pass-holders of the new ownership and consequent repudiation of the former owner's gratuities but allowed all to be our guests for a full week. At the end of that time other theatres took over our prize billing and window card locations and we went on a cash advertising basis with street cars, etc. The result: for the first time in seven years the house went consistently in black ink and our competitors took over our red ink surplus to mark up their gained pass patronage from our prize window and billing locations.

Tell of 'Red' Weeks

That's not a "'wind" story, it's real and there are a couple of fellows who were managing the other houses that will get a laugh if they happen to read this, because they told me of their "red" weeks that followed the taking over of my pass commitments.

Another instance was the result of an observation we made from behind a screen door in a drug store when some employes

Greet Your Patrons

The wise theatre manager makes it a point to be present in the lobby and foyer as frequently as possible to greet patrons. Continued absence implies a lack of personal interest, which many patrons resent. They like to be welcomed, and they'll go where they ARE welcomed.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

of the advertising department of a newspaper were outside discussing what theatre to attend on one sunny Sunday. A decision was finally made to patronize my opposition, as they could get passes from me the next morning. That cured me and to this day I am tighter than a submarine turret door when it comes to giving passes to any department of a newspaper that charges me for the space I get. Go along with the editorial, composing room foreman and make-up man and, on occasion, the messenger boys, but never get so liberal that the circulation, ad department, bookkeepers, etc., can feel sure of free admittance.

You can't be too close with passes. Make sure that every single one is supercharged with a virus to start and spread a veritable epidemic of theatre prestige and goodwill. Try your very damnedest to keep them away from those undeserving or those inclined to be unappreciative of the courtesy extended. Go through the list frequently, very frequently, with a fine tooth comb and eliminate those who may have passed out of the positions that promised favor or prestige to your theatre. Gauge carefully the services rendered by EVERYBODY carrying a pass to your theatre and cancel those that don't hit the target. Think of the pass in terms of paid admissions and you will quickly realize how promiscuous distribution can immerse your p&l statement in red ink.

No Pad of Passes

Don't allow your publicity man to go forth with a full pad of passes when he starts after merchant cooperation. If there is no advantage to be gained by the merchant in return for the money or effort he expends you're far better off leaving him and his business out of your exploitation and advertising contemplations. But, if the effort promises return to him in prestige, added business or institutional promotion, he is indubitably indebted to you for the idea and the cooperative effort or expense you put forth in pushing his business into the public eye. Why on earth should you pay anybody anything for the privilege of pushing patrons through their doorways? Remember that your theatre dispenses glamor and that glamor is the most intriguing and magnetic element in the intricate composite of "things" that go to make up the modern successful merchandising formula. Careful study of the story, stars, scenery, continuity, costumes, etc., will reveal numberless opportunities where local merchants or professional men can benefit by getting their commercial effort firmly hitched to angles illustrated in your film. Such indirect advertising is acknowledged to be the most desirable and productive approach to public favor. Why pay—in passes or accessories—those whom you permit to make use of your valued cooperation? I mean that paraphrased insert, too. Don't give away the accessories used—make the cooperator pay for stills, cards, etc. Such procedure adds dignity and heightens the value of theatre tieups.

Two kinds of passes are desirable in any theatre. One, the free pass, for use only in preferred instances and the other, the service charge pass, for general theatre courtesies. The difference is that you actually pay the holder of the "free" pass for attending your theatre. You pay in accounting, printing costs, handling cost and other incidental expense that mount to a sizable figure when computed on a quantity basis. The "service charge" pass reimburses you the actual expense plus a fraction of the cost of "expense-per-patron" handling. Big companies allocate the "service charge" revenue to employes welfare and other special accounts, and you'd be surprised at the staggering totals they aggregate. Try the "service charge" pass on the cadgers and undesirables. It pays!

Any treatise on the pass situation would be sorely incomplete without proper consideration being given that annoying, embarrassing nuisance, the gate crashers—those neighbors who occupy the adjoining stores, or the one across the street. These people are not content with making their living and swelling their bank accounts with the patronage brought to their doors by the theatre. They consider themselves—for some unknown reason—as privileged characters entitled to make free use of your facilities for themselves and their families—and often their employes—at any and all times with only signal acknowledgement of the existence of the cashier and box-office. These are die-hards and difficult to handle because of the intimacy of relationship and the proximity of effort. But, it can be done and the following "true" incident will illustrate an effective and proved procedure:

A druggist occupying space adjoining, and with entry into, a theatre lobby, developed the habit of using theatre facilities at will for members of his family. He just brought them to the door and passed them through. The theatre man, growing tired of being imposed upon, retaliated by visiting the drug store during the owner's absence, taking various articles of merchandise off the shelves and casually calling attention of the clerks to his act. At the end of the month the druggist sent a bill which the theatre man ignored and when pressed for settlement he expressed annoyance and surprise. When he explained that he considered "turnabout fair play" and that he was engaging in no practice that the druggist had not consistently indulged in at theatre's expense, the druggist apologized and the practice stopped. Just try taking a hamburger or a shirt or a chair from the establishment of those presumptuous neighbors and see how quickly you can shock them into a consciousness of their unfairness.

Don't Give Theatre Away

Quit giving your theatre, its attractions, its prestige, its dignity away. Make every merchant in the entire community aware of the fact that your theatre is the magnet that draws the folks past their windows and into their establishments. Let them know that without you and your business the flow of traffic would be in another direction and that their sales and profits would suffer accordingly. Make them understand that in lending cooperative effort to the theatre they are only helping to make their own cash register ring and that effort on your part, beyond the formality of acquainting them with the "know-how" of cashing in on the magnetism of your attractions, should not be necessary or expected.

Put those passes 'way up high where they can only be reached by the people of great community stature. If you don't believe that your merchandise is worth the price of admission, close your doors and get out of theatre business. You can't expect to enjoy the respect and goodwill of the people who make your effort profitable by paying their way when you engage in the pernicious practice of making "fish of one and fowl of another" for reasons that lack full business justification.

Remember, the theatre pass—like the amorous embrace of a woman—is valued more highly and pursued more avidly when it is difficult to obtain. The moment it is easy to get it loses its appeal and becomes a menace to the giver.

Makes Kids Sing!

Getting local boys and girls from the audience to become song leaders during the running of song reels is really building up mass kiddie business for Ben Cantor, Belgrade Theatre, Philadelphia. By giving prizes to best performances of the song leaders, Cantor has all of the kids in the neighborhood clamoring for a chance to get up there to lead the gang. Reaction thus far has been more than just "terrific," with Cantor thinking up new gags to build the stunt to even greater heights of enthusiastic participation. Columbia's song reels are used to get the kids into vociferous action.—PH.

THE BOX OFFICE SLANT

California Gold Rush

Republic Western 60 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Will continue to please the host of Red Ryder fans with its action and well-paced tempo.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Wild Bill Elliott built up a top name as the lead in the Red Ryder series, and with the other well known characters should really pack 'em in for this one.

Cast: Wild Bill Elliott, Bobby Blake, Alice Fleming, Peggy Stewart, Russell Simpson, Dick Curtis, Joel Friedkin, Kenne Duncan, Tom London. Credits: Producer, Sidney Picker. Director, R. G. Springsteen. Photography, William Bradford. Screenplay, Bob Williams.

Plot: During the California gold rush days, a thriving pioneer town is being threatened by outlaws who hold up the stagecoaches. The Duchess sends for Red Ryder to stop the desperadoes, but her message is intercepted by the hotel keeper, who is actually the leader of the gang and who wants to own the stagecoach line. Eventually, Red saves the line, apprehends the culprits and establishes peace in the community.

Comment: This was the last Red Ryder made by Wild Bill Elliott before Republic changed him to bigger and better things, and substituted Allen Lane for the role. Elliott does a bang-up job in his final portrayal of the popular characterization, taken from the comic strip. His voice registers well, and he carries himself like a Western hero should. Bobby Blake is excellent as his little Indian pal, "Little Beaver," and Alice Fleming continues to supply the "Duchess" role with sincerity of acting not usually found in Westerns. A surprisingly good job is turned in by Dick Curtis as the harmonica-playing villain; he gives the role a new twist, by underplaying it a bit instead of overdoing the idea. Photography is good and the direction keeps the pace of the picture at the rapid tempo a Western must have.

Little Giant

Universal Comedy 91 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Presenting a new Costello who will not only entertain those who have enjoyed him before, but will also win him many new fans.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: On a par with many of the better Abbott & Costello offerings.

Cast: Bud Abbott, Lou Costello, Brenda Joyce, Jacqueline De Wit, George Cleveland, Elena Verdugo, Mary Gordon, Pierre Watkin, Donald MacBride, Victor Kilian, Margaret Dumont, George Chandler, Beatrice Gray. Credits: Directed by William A. Seiter. Original story by Paul Jarrico and Richard Collins. Screenplay by Walter De Leon. Photography, Charles Van Enger. Produced by Joe Gershenson.

Plot: Costello, a country boy, takes a correspondence course in salesmanship and then goes to a big city to prove his ability. Needless to say, he gets into trouble quite often, but ends up by proving his worth.

Comment: This is not the usual slapstick comedy one expects to find in an Abbott & Costello picture. But that doesn't mean that there isn't plenty of comedy, for there is lots of it, this time in a quieter form of entertainment without the wild, hysterical goings-on that usually accompany A&C's appearances on the screen. Here Costello plays the part of a correspondence school salesman and proves himself not only a capable performer but a fine comedian. His fans will enjoy his work in this picture. Story is quite a departure from the format used in their previous offerings, for Costello plays it straight, and there isn't any of the customary by-play between himself and Abbott. Even those theatregoers who are not Abbott & Costello fans will find plenty to entertain them in this one, for they'll get many laughs out of the screwy situations in which Costello becomes involved. Abbott plays a dual role very capably, and in the balance of the cast Brenda Joyce, Jacqueline De Wit, Elena Verdugo, Mary Gordon and George Cleveland turn in worthy contributions. William Seiter deserves top credit for the excellence of his direction and Joe Gershenson, who produced, for the choice of the material and other production values.

Meet Me on Broadway

Columbia Musical Comedy 78 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) A fairly entertaining picture that will please the average audience, if it is not too critical.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Marjorie Reynolds has to carry the "name" burden on this one, and she isn't quite strong enough. Will satisfy on double bills.

Cast: Marjorie Reynolds, Fred Brady, Jinx Falkenburg, Loren Tindall, Spring Byington, Gene Lockhart, Allen Jenkins, William Forrest, Jack Rice. Credits: Producer, Burt Kelly. Director, Leigh Jason. Photography, Burnett Guffey. Screenplay by George Bricker and Jack Henley from an original story by George Bricker.

Plot: A young Broadwayite, aspiring to be a producer, gets a chance to stay out of the poorhouse when a small town country club engages him to supervise a charity show. He ropes in a pal and his unsuspecting girl. Complications arise when the girl gets angry at the deception, and apparently falls for a local swain. It looks bad for all concerned, but things are righted in the end.

Comment: There is nothing in this offering to lift it above the average musical. The music is fair and the dance numbers are routine, with a surprising dominance of male dancers. The story embraces the same old group of cliches. Marjorie Reynolds performs capably. Fred Brady is okay as the aspiring producer and Allen Jenkins turns in the best performance of all with his usual workmanlike portrayal of a dumb but good-hearted sidekick to Brady. Jinx Falkenburg has little to do other than look lovely. Gene Lockhart seems like he would be more at home as a low villain, such as his most successful roles have been, and is not at his best in his part of the small town rich man. Photography is good and the direction provides neat pace.

Junior Prom

Monogram Musical 69 mins.

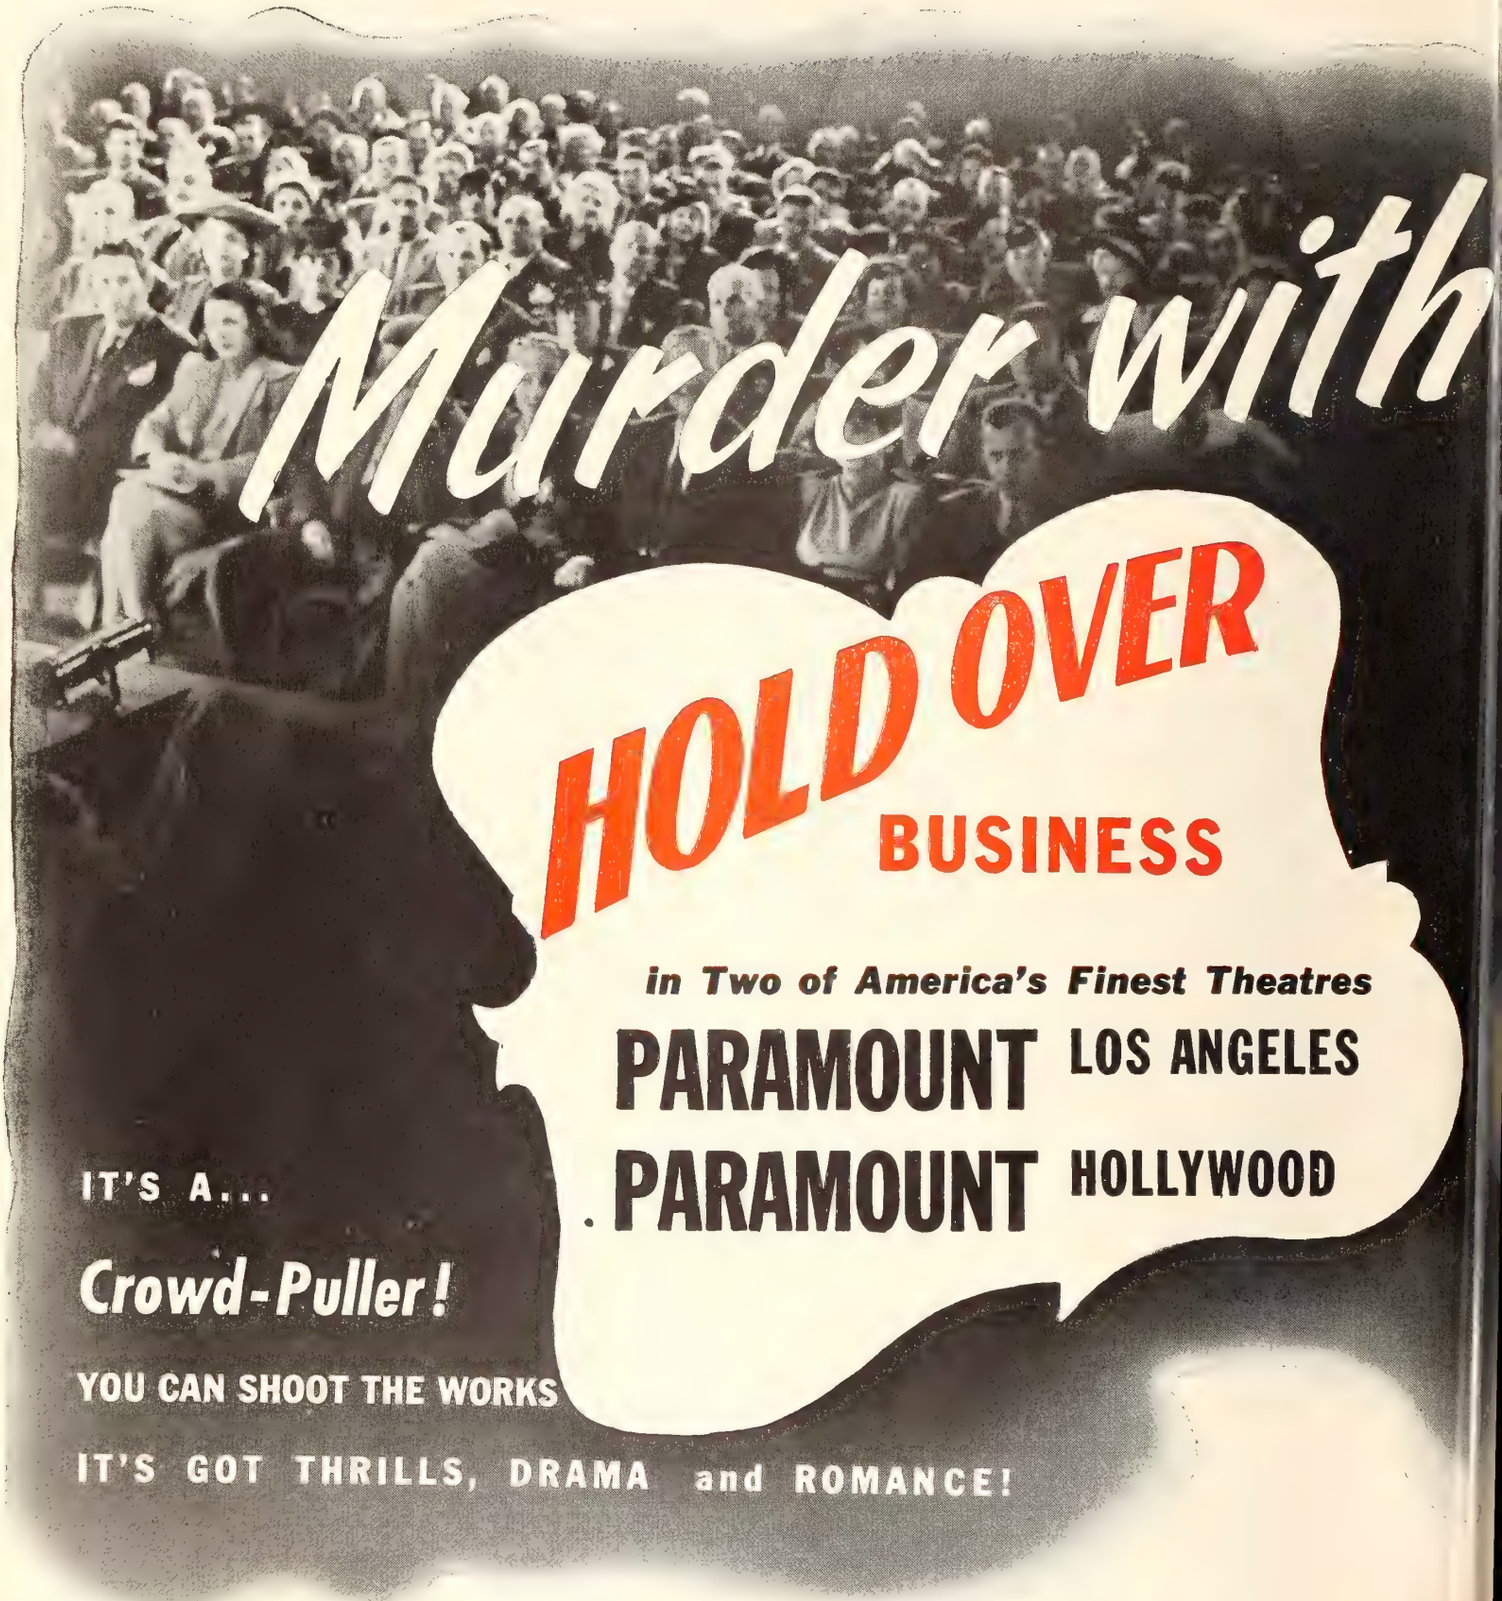
AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) First in a series of Teen-Age pictures, this provides ample entertainment for the jive and jitterbug audience.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Will make a satisfactory second feature in any spot, and worthy of a top spot in situations that draw the teen-age crowd.

Cast: Freddie Stewart, June Preisser, Judy Clark, Noel Neill, Jackie Moran, Frankie Darro, Warren Mills, Murray Davis, Mira McKinney, Belle Mitchell, Milt Kibbee, Sam Flint, Charles Evans, Hank Henry, Abe Lyman and his Orchestra, Eddie Heywood and his Orchestra, Harry (the Hipster) Gibson, The Airliners. Credits: Produced by Sam Katzman. Directed by Arthur Dreifuss. Photography, Ira Morgan. Original story and screenplay by Erna Lazarus and Hal Collins.

Plot: Trouble starts when two boys are nominated to run for president of the Student Body at the High School and one youngster's father announces that he will withdraw his annual contribution unless his boy is elected. This not only divides the school kids but in one family raises trouble among three sisters. The principal naturally refuses to follow the rich man's request and announces that the best man will win, which he does when the other boy is chosen for president.

Comment: With Freddie Stewart, a singer who has created a following through his records, in the leading role, lots of jive and jitterbug entertainment, the music of Abe Lyman and his Orchestra and Eddie Heywood giving his special rendition of Loch Lomond, this picture is apparently in the groove for teen-age youngsters. It is the first of a series of Teen-Age pictures planned by Producer Sam Katzman who has incorporated into it all the characters and incidents needed to attract and entertain that following. And for that reason, although there is very little story, it should make a very satisfactory second feature or even topper in the situations that draw the Teen-Age crowd. Besides Stewart's pleasing presentation of several songs, there are a few sung by Judy Clark. June Preisser offers some more of her acrobatic dancing, and Harry (the Hipster) Gibson offers a jive number called Keep the Beat. Cast is capable throughout, with Murray Davis accounting for quite a few laughs with his comedy routines and Hank Henry adding some entertaining moments in his role. Katzman and his associate producer, Maurice Duke, have given the picture good production values, and Arthur Dreifuss with his direction has spotted the song and dance numbers well and made the youngsters such typical high-school kids that the film holds an appeal for the grown-ups too.



From This Day Forward

RKO Radio Drama 95 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) This is excellent entertainment for everyone. Being the story of a love that overcame all obstacles, it has a strong appeal for the feminine trade, but the men will also enjoy it. Mark Stevens, a newcomer, looks like a swell bet for stardom.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: With the Joan Fontaine name for marquee draw, your advance exploitation built around the theme

Advance Screenings Hypo 'Forest' in New England

Advance screenings for local celebrities and leaders of civic and religious groups in New England cities gave initial impetus to several successful openings in that territory to PRC's "The Enchanted Forest."

Screenings were started in Waterbury, Conn., one week before the film opened at the Strand Theatre there, with Manager Paul Klinger inviting Parent-Teacher Association representatives, women's clubs and newspaper executives. Sixty-five nuns also were given special permission by their superiors to attend the showing. The screening resulted in almost a full-column story in the Waterbury Democrat headed: "New PRC Film Draws Praise From 65 Nuns." Every school in the city was placarded by the Parent-Teacher groups with cards urging attendance at the film and women's clubs rallied their membership to attend.

Newspaper as Sponsor

In Rochester, where the picture played the Century, the advance screening was taken over by Publisher Frank Gannett through the efforts of RKO City Manager Jay Golden and Century Theatre Manager Arthur Krolick. Gannett rented the Rochester Club's private projection room for the screening and invited civic leaders, heads of the school system and executives and reporters from his two local papers, the Democrat & Chronicle and the Times-Union. A large portion of the audience consisted of representatives of parochial schools and church groups who publicized the picture in mailings and on bulletin boards.

Following the Rochester screening Krolick set up a city-wide cooperative campaign which included teaser trailers at other first-run houses; co-op ads from Sears Roebuck and other stores; window displays in a dozen stores; 250 window cards; tack cards on newsstands in town and special heralds distributed at skating rinks and restaurants.

At the special request of Father Randall, head of the parochial school system in Rochester, an additional screening was set for the first Saturday of the film's run for 500 nuns and priests whose duties precluded their attending at any other time. This screening and the publicity resulting from it helped the latter part of the engagement materially.

Newspaper space was generous, with art and stories published daily for a week in advance of opening and with editorials following the opening.

The Buffalo engagement of the film at the Lafayette Theatre also was started off with an advance screening for publishers and reporters from local newspapers, women's clubs and Parent-Teacher group representatives, public and parochial school officials and representatives of the Parks Commission. Resulting newspaper publicity was gratifying.

Local exploitation set by Lafayette Manager George McKenna and Publicity Manager Bill Brereton included 22 illuminated 24-sheet stands; special process cards on all local taxicabs and in windows and banners on all local news delivery trucks.

'Tarzan' Ad Campaign In Adventure Magazines

Reaching into the field of popular priced magazines not usually covered by motion pictures, RKO Radio's national ad campaign on Sol Lesser's "Tarzan and the Leopard Woman" gets under way this month with a combined circulation of 15,000,000.

S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity, has selected media with appeal to adventure fans as shown by the following list which, in addition to Liberty, Look, Argosy and Pic includes Black Mask, Daredevil, 44 Western, New Detective, Big Book Western, Love Book, Love Novels, Detective Tales, Rangeland Romances, Star Western, 10 Story Western, Adventure, Love Short Stories, New Western, Romance, Ace High Western, Sports Novels, Dime Mystery, Dime Western, 15 Western Tales, Dime Detective, Railroad, New Love, Famous Fantastic, All Story Love, Shadow, Western Story and others.

HATS GO CRAZIER. This is a scene from the "Goofy Hat Parade" at the Oriental Theatre, Chicago, staged in connection with the showing there of the Golden-United Artists production, "Breakfast in Hollywood." The parade was followed by a contest for the Goofiest Hat and women showed such intense interest in the event that they stormed the theatre requiring the assignment of special police patrols to maintain order in the theatre and at the doors.

'Forever' Gets Big Air-Wave Buildup

The concentrated effort given to national radio exploitation on International's "Tomorrow Is Forever" has resulted in several national radio contests, interviews with some of the film's stars and the playing of its theme song music by live orchestras and through recordings on disc jockey programs, according to S. Barret McCormick, advertising and publicity director of RKO Radio, which releases the picture.

The Ladies Be Seated program broadcast nationally via ABC picked one married couple from the Chicago audience, where the program originates, for a visit to New York City to attend the Broadway premiere of the picture. The same show sent the best "singing housewife" on a Hollywood all-expenses-paid trip, paid for by International.

A two-week contest on the NBC Maggie McNellis program offered 100 copies of the novel from which "Tomorrow Is Forever" is derived and 100 records of the theme song of that name for the best letters on "Why I would like to see the picture before reading the book" and "Why I would like to read the book before seeing the picture." In addition WNEW, New York, a 50,000 watt station, donated 14 spot announcements promoting a letter writing contest on "Why I would prefer to see 'Tomorrow Is Forever' at a private screening" with 20 winners selected to be guests at a private showing of the film at RKO Radio's home office. A line was carried to the projection room from the radio station with winners interviewed as to their reaction. Mutual Broadcasting System dubbed a record of Claudette Colbert from the sound track of the film on its audience participation "Guess Who" program, followed by an announcement of the film's New York premiere playdate.

Interviews included Claudette Colbert on the Kate Smith CBS national show and the same star on the Elsa Maxwell Mutual coast-to-coast show, the latter with Orson Welles. Natalie Wood, six-year old featured player was interviewed by Martha Deane, Maggie McNellis and Alma Kitchell, all national shows, prior to the New York opening.

MGM Show Builder Units Being Readied for Road

Two MGM Show Builder Units soon will start tours of small town situations in the New Orleans and Cincinnati territories as a sort of experiment to see what advantages small town theatre owners have taken of suggestions previously made by other MGM field representatives, according to William R. Ferguson, director of exploitation, who is now mapping out the itineraries.

Mark Jenkins, who has been touring the Dallas area with Show Builder No. 1 will be in charge of the visit to New Orleans with his unit which is now being remodeled and repainted for the trip. Norman Linz will be in charge of the second unit, now being readied for the tour through the Cincinnati territory. Ken Prickett formerly was in charge of this unit which has been off the road for five years and had covered a number of small towns. During Linz's second trip through the same territory he will contribute new ideas and make a check on those previously given to exhibitors by Prickett.

Money Dates for April

For the greater part of April—that is, up to and including the twentieth—you'll still be in the throes of Lent, but that's no sign for you to let down in the booking of quality attractions or in your program of showmanship activities. Spring, which got under way in March (on the calendar, at least) will be making itself more keenly felt, with the result that many people will be taking to the great outdoors after hibernating in their homes and apartments all winter. It will be up to you to take their minds off the balmy weather (and April showers, when they occur will help you) by arranging a "Festival of Spring Hits" for the month. Pick the most outstanding hits available. Send a calendar of the attractions to your mailing list. Display a huge "calendar" board in the lobby. Biggest day of the month, of course, is Easter, and you should make every effort to make that day, and those which follow, big box-office days for your theatre.

National Observance Periods

APRIL 1: APRIL FOOL'S DAY. Although not strictly observed as a holiday, this day affords many people a lot of fun making fools of others, provided the others are off guard. You could stage an April Fool Matinee or Midnight Show designed for laughing purposes only. Ushers could insist on patrons doing the ushering. Subjects could, at first, be projected upside down. The janitor and his assistants could begin their cleaning tasks during the performance. In fact, anything could happen, and the more gags you use—clean, wholesome, fun-packed gags—the better time your patrons will have. Be sure to let them know in advance that crazy things will take place, that the show will be entirely in the spirit of good, clean fun.

APRIL 6: ARMY DAY—U. S. ENTERED WORLD WAR I, 1917. Honor local heroes of both World Wars I and II. If there is Army equipment near you, perhaps you could arrange to have it displayed in the lobby or in front of the theatre. If there are any community observances of the occasion, be sure your theatre is represented.

APRIL 14: PALM SUNDAY. With Easter just a week away, your activities for that day should be pretty well lined up.

APRIL 21: EASTER. Twice the space possible here for the purpose would be necessary to list all the available activities for this day. Suffice it to say that the following suggestions should help you get started on many additional stunts to make Easter a real money date. Get the newspaper and a number of merchants to sponsor a Big Easter Egg Hunt at the city park. Hide the eggs (hard-boiled and dyed in many bright colors) in various sections of the park. Have the kiddies gather at a specific spot, then at the signal "go," let them begin their lively scramble. Prizes donated by merchants should be awarded the winners. Following the egg hunt, hold a matinee at your theatre. Good gift for each child: a small nest of candy Easter eggs, promoted from a local confectionery shop. (The shortage of sugar may put a crimp in this stunt; therefore, in its place, you may be able to promote little toy rabbits or other Eastertide novelties as prizes.) Two or three days in advance of Easter hold a Flower Matinee, with local women collecting flowers brought by patrons. These flowers could be given to such institutions as the Old Folks' Home, the orphanage, etc. If your Easter Week attraction features a feminine star, you might run a contest in the paper which requires the contestant to sketch a bonnet for the star. Photo or sketch of the star should be cut off at the forehead, and there should be ample space for the contestant to draw the bonnet. For the best sketch, winner would receive a hat donated by a local millinery shop. Still on the Eastern bonnet theme: With the cooperation of a department store, why not conduct a search for the funniest, old-fashioned, outmoded Easter bonnet? Hats are brought to a store booth, where contestants register them. Then a special committee chooses the dozen or so funniest, and the store displays them in the window. You and the store management can "get together" on the prizes. Stage a flower contest for Easter Week, offering prizes for the best home-grown plants or flowers cultivated by amateurs. Flowers should be attractively arranged in the lobby, with code-number tags attached to each. A committee of judges (local florists) select the winners. Comparison of code numbers with names of entrants will determine identities of the winners. Incidentally, an enterprising florist should be eager to cooperate with you in arranging a floral display in your lobby for the Easter season. Tie in with dry-cleaning establishments by having "spruce up" messages imprinted on garment bags. Using stills of the stars of your Easter Week attractions, arrange window displays with this sort of approach: "Dress as smartly as (name of star) . . . and you'll be the stand-out attraction of the Easter Parade." Tie up with transportation companies to carry signs something like this: "If you can't drive your car, if you want to save your shoes, board a car and ride downtown . . . and see the Easter Parade in comfort . . . then continue your 'sit-down strike' in a comfortable seat at the Blank Theatre." Win goodwill by donating your theatre for a community church service. Let patrons check their purchases in your lobby during the fortnight preceding Easter. Use Easter symbols, such as baby chicks, rabbits, colored eggs for the backgrounds of your lobby displays. Your cut-outs, shadow-boxes and still boards might be built in the form of bunnies and Easter eggs. The foregoing ideas are only a beginning—you take it from here, and good luck!

Special Tieup Opportunties

APRIL 7-13: NATIONAL BE-KIND-TO-ANIMALS WEEK. Sometime during this week stage a pet parade for the kiddies, and offer a prize for the best-looking cats and dogs, the best trick-performing animals, the most amusing, etc. Perhaps you could get an official of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals to appear on your stage nightly and urge people to treat their pets and animals humanely. If there are a goodly number of horse-drawn vehicles in your community, you might announce that an unknown person will keep tab on people driving horses, on people who own dogs and other pets, and that those found treating their pets most humanely will be awarded a pass to your theatre. Be sure to point out, however, that not all kind owners will receive passes—only those observed by your special observer. You might tie up with stores handling foods and merchandise for pet animals.

APRIL 24: FIRST NEWSPAPER, BOSTON NEWS LETTER, PUBLISHED 1704. Here's an opportunity to do a good turn for your newspaper. Arrange a lobby display that will show the advances made in the gathering and dissemination of news; that will also show the important part the newspaper plays in keeping local citizenry informed. Teletype machines, sample slugs of type, examples of stories from the original copy to the galley might also be shown.

ARIL 27: MORSE, INVENTOR OF TELEGRAPHY, BORN 1791. Local telegraph company might display old and new forms of telegraphic communication in your lobby. Attendant might demonstrate the Morse code, giving a message about a coming attraction in code, then deciphering it for patrons.

APRIL 27: AUDUBON, NATURALIST, BORN 1780. Tie up with schools for the best drawings of wild animals and birds to be displayed at your theatre. Offer prizes for the best essays on Audubon.

Sectional Observances

April 1-7: Conservation Week (in several States).

April 19: Patriot's Day (Maine and Massachusetts).

April 26: Confederate Memorial Day in Alabama, Florida, Georgia and Mississippi.

Search For 'Doll Face' In Great Lakes Area

Opening guns in the Great Lakes region exploitation campaign for 20th Century-Fox's "Doll Face" were simultaneous searches for a "Doll Face of Detroit" and a "Doll Face of Milwaukee," based on contestants' appearance and singing ability. Recordings of the finalists in each city will be made in Detroit and together with photographs they will be forwarded to Ted Weems in Chicago, who will select the winner.

Exploiteers Jay Frank, Al Winston and Virginia Seguin, for 20th-Fox worked with Dave Idzal and Bette Smith of the Fox Theatre to arrange for Detroit's powerful WWJ to carry six announcements daily during the "Doll Face" search, in addition to which the station also is sponsoring a fifteen-minute daily musical show featuring music from the film.

Winner to Guest Star

Detroit's "Doll Face" will be guest star with Ted Weems and his Orchestra in the Boulevard Room of Chicago's Stevens Hotel and will appear with Weems for two weeks during which period she will be aired locally and nationally with the orchestra, singing music from "Doll Face."

Newspapers in Detroit and Chicago are featuring photographs of the contestants daily with additional space assured when the final winner is announced.

The Milwaukee "Doll Face" search closely parallels the Detroit campaign with radio station WEMP of that city conducting the contest with the winner to receive a week's engagement at the Schroeder Hotel. Milwaukee's Sentinel and Journal are cooperating with Jack Stamaton of the Fox Theatres with daily coverage of the event.

Samuel Goldwyn has engaged Merlin, noted painter of girls, to do full-length figure portraits of Virginia Mayo, Vera-Ellen and the six Goldwyn Girls who will be sent to New York shortly to exploit "The Kid From Brooklyn."

The girls will be pictured in their costumes from the Danny Kaye musical, the portraits to be used in ads and blown to twelve-foot size for display at the Astor opening of the film.

EXCITING EXPLOITATION. One of the highlights of the campaign essayed by MGM, under direction of Bill Ferguson, exploitation director, for the showing of "The Last Chance" in New York City's Criterion Theatre was the promotion of two walkie-talkies, handled by an attractive young couple on Broadway. Persons interviewed were asked "Last Chance" questions, with tickets to see the film going to those answering correctly.

Phone Salesmanship

When moviegoers of Lexington, Ky., called Schine's Kentucky Theatre for the time schedule, the cashier gave them the information and then quickly volunteered "Please don't forget that MGM's 'Our Vines Have Tender Grapes' is opening here Sunday."

Reporter As Prince In 'Cinderella' Contest

An additionally valuable twist to the Search for Cinderella Contest being conducted in several key cities in connection with Warners' "Cinderella Jones" was effected in Stamford, Conn., where a newspaper reporter was enlisted to serve as the Prince Charming who was to judge which girl's foot most nearly fitted the glass slipper provided by Warners to exploit the film's playdate at the Stamford Theatre.

The glass slipper used in the contest was placed on display in Spelke's Shoe Store about ten days in advance of the picture's opening with both radio and newspapers cooperating in publicizing the fact that a Warner representative was in town looking for the Cinderella with a foot small enough to fit the magic slipper.

Newspaper advertising copy used by the shoe store invited girls of the community to come to the store and try on the glass slipper. About ten merchants joined in a newspaper ad announcing the contest and naming the gifts.

Fine Cooperation Benefits Brotherhood Youth Show

Cooperation of all sections of the community, churches, business, civic, patriotic and schools was obtained for the Brotherhood Youth Show held at the Skouras Roosevelt Theatre, Flushing, on Washington's Birthday, during community observance of American Brotherhood Week.

Local merchants donated four $25 Victory bonds as prizes for a poster and skit contest on the Brotherhood slogan theme, "Teamwork in Peace as in War," which were awarded at the show. Another friend of the theatre, head of a printing firm, donated 2000 hard tickets for distribution to students, and 8000 heralds for distribution to theatre patrons. Literature was displayed in the lobby and also distributed to churches and schools. The show and contest were mentioned in school assemblies and church bulletins, and heralds were displayed in public libraries and stores. Local newspapers gave generous space in their news columns and took pictures.

An adult general committee representative of community leaders was headed by Supreme Court Justice Charles S. Colden as honorary chairman and Mrs. Dorothea Pincus of Bayside High School as chairman. A Youth Committee composed of students from high schools and grade schools was organized. Both committees held regular meetings at the theatre and reported on progress of plans for promoting the show. Trailers on the screen carried details to patrons and hard tickets were given out at the box-office to students and other applicants.

A jury of leading artists, including Vincent Trotta, art director of National Screen; E. C. Gaylor, vice-president and general manager of the Morgan Lithograph Company of Cleveland and New York; G. E. R. Michelson, and Harold P. Newhouse of a Long Island newspaper publishing chain, selected the winning posters and clubwomen noted for their cultural activities selected the winning skit which was performed on the stage and witnessed by two Hollywood talent scouts. Winners were photographed with the judges, and poster award winners received offers of jobs on their graduation this year, so high was the standard of their work.

The Brotherhood Youth Show drew a capacity attendance of 1800 young people and adults and was held in a patriotic setting. Hand-carved and painted panels of American historic subjects, the work of Mrs. Florence Lake, local artist, decorated the theatre lobby. Local American Legion posts provided the color guard and a Son of the American Legion led in the Pledge of Allegiance at the opening patriotic exercises. The youth leaders had charge of the stage activities, Flushing High School presenting a historic playlet. Local merchants were on stage to present the bond prizes to the winners in person. Louis Effret, New York sports writer, and Ray Flaherty, New York Yankees, addressed the young people.

Climax of the show was the taking of the American Brotherhood pledge by the audience, led by Miss Mildred A. FitzGibbons, manager of the theatre, who organized and promoted the Youth Brotherhood Show and campaign.

4948 Entries in Saunders' Contest on 'Spellbound'

Four thousand nine hundred and forty-eight entries in an exploitation contest to promote "Spellbound" were announced this week by Matt L. Saunders, manager of Loew's Poli at Bridgeport, Conn.

As explained in last week's SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW, Saunders' stunt was to have the Bridgeport Post run a series of four two-column cuts showing scenes on four consecutive days preceding the local premiere of "Spellbound." Contestants were to identify the names of the pictures and tell in their own words the types of roles Miss Bergman portrayed. Prizes were a pair of nylons each day for the best answer and a pair of guest tickets for the second best answers.

Bobby-Sox Jamboree Set by Gerry Wollaston

Plans have been announced for a Bobby-Sox Jamboree on March 20 at the State Theatre, Harrisburg, when a greater Harrisburg championship jitterbug competition, a program by a popular orchestra and a preview of a musical film are scheduled.

Gerry Wollaston, State manager, has announced the event, and has opened registration for the contest. The top team of hep-cat dancers from each high school in the area will vie for cash awards and other honors. Red McCarthy and his 17 Jive Bombers will furnish the musical background for the stage revue, and Wollaston is angling now for a Hollywood musical for the evening.—HA.

Girl Scout Week Offers Theatremen Opportunity to Offset Lenten Slump

Of prime interest to showmen is the imminence of Girl Scout Anniversary Week, March 12-18. Activities expended in tieing theatres in with this national celebration will do much to offset the usual slump almost universally experienced during the early part of the Lenten season.

Girl Scout Anniversary Week this year marks the 34th year of the organization's existence, and activities of the enrolled million girls between the ages of 7 to 18 years will center around celebrations in observance of its founding.

The importance of close cooperation between theatres and groups of this kind cannot be overemphasized in connection with the efforts of theatremen to institutionalize their theatres. In this case, the Girl Scout organization is recognized officially as the largest of its kind, and because of its size and growing strength, is of enormous potential value in activities other than the forthcoming celebration.

Group Organization Valuable

It is not necessary to point out to experienced showmen the value of having an organized group of enthusiastic youngsters in friendly camaraderie with the theatre. Their adult leaders usually are leaders in other civic endeavor and more often than not will be eager to cooperate with plans of theatremen to center the activities of at least a part of the week's celebration in the theatre itself, thus establishing the house again as the center of each city's social life. This may not be true of the deluxe operation in key cities, but it definitely is true of the neighborhood house.

Plans for the Girl Scout Anniversary Week include a particular kind of activity for each day of the week and have been announced to include Girl Scout Sunday, Homemaking Day, Health and Safety Day, International Friendship Day, Arts and Crafts Day, Out-of-Doors Day, and Citizenship Day. These special days, alone, should suggest unlimited tie-up ideas by which the theatre can become a central part of the activities.

Arts and Crafts Day, for instance, might be focused upon by showmen sponsoring a contest for the best this-or-that made by the youngsters, with all entries in the contest to be displayed in the foyer, on the mezzanine or some conspicuous spot in the theatre. Showmen have proved in the past that exhibits of this kind have definite drawing power among friends and relatives of the entrants.

A statement from Girl Scout headquarters in New York reveals the information that Girl Scout Councils exist in every state and also in Alaska, Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, Hawaii and the Philippines. A perusal of the telephone book in each locality under the heading "Girl Scout Council" will reveal whether or not a branch of the organization exists in the towns and cities of interested showmen. Headquarters also states that photographic and other material for lobby displays are available from local sources.

JUDICIAL. Final phases in judging winners of RKO Radio's recent "Falcon in San Francisco" contest is discussed by S. Barret McCormick, director of advertising and publicity (seated, right), with Arthur Brilant, special division features manager, and Charles Solomen, advertising manager American Safety Razor Corp., sponsors of the "Falcon" radio show. Standing are Hal Coulter of Mutual Broadcasting, and Lou D. Straus of the razor company.

Emmons H. Turner who has been assisting Art Moger in New England, succeeds Ed Scoen, resigned, in the Cincinnati area, also covering Toledo.

All changes go into effect the beginning of March and all will work under the direct supervision of William W. Brumberg, manager of the field staff.

BOX-OFFICE SLANTS

From This Day Forward

of the picture, and the introduction of newcomer Mark Stevens, this looks like one of the top grossers of the season.

Cast: Joan Fontaine, Mark Stevens, Rosemary DeCamp, Henry Morgan, Wally Brown, Arline Judge, Renny McEvoy, Bobby Driscoll, Mary Treen, Queenie Smith, Doreen McCann, Erskine Sanford. Credits: Produced by Jack J. Gross and William L. Pereira. Directed by John Berry. Screenplay by Hugo Butler. Based upon the novel, "All Brides Are Beautiful," by Thomas Bell. Photography, George Barnes.

Plot: Told in retrospect by a returned soldier, this is the story of the lovely book store clerk whom he married when he was a machinist during the depression. Their love and her courage sustained them through his loss of a job and difficulty with the law. Then, when war breaks out, he takes a swing-shift job. Bravely she faces his army induction. When he returns from the war, all is well.

Comment: Based upon the theory that true love is strong enough to overcome all obstacles, this picture is a natural for the feminine trade. And it won't be just the story that will appeal to them, for once word-of-mouth gets around about newcomer Mark Stevens, who plays the romantic lead opposite Joan Fontaine, patrons will be crowding the box-office windows to get in and get a look at him. It will be their confirmation of the excellence of the picture as a whole, that should make it one of the top grossers of the season. Unlike most romantic dramas, this one is a down-to-earth yarn about everyday people, their human failings and their struggle to survive. Picture is timely, too, for the leading character is a returned veteran looking for a job, and this is the role that Mark Stevens handles with such exceptional merit. One finds it hard to believe that this is his first starring part. Joan Fontaine, as always, turns in an excellent portrayal as the young wife, and the balance of the cast, from Rosemary DeCamp and Henry Morgan who play a struggling married couple, down to and including their two children, played by Bobby Driscoll and Doreen McCann, are all human and convincing counterparts of real life characters. Although there may be certain situations which the audience may not readily accept, or even understand—the vicissitudes of life through which these people struggled—everybody should find entertainment in the picture, for Director John Berry has handled the theme with sympathy and understanding. His love scenes and human reactions are memorable. Production credits go to William L. Pereira and Jack J. Gross.

Strange Impersonation

Republic Drama 68 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Fairly entertaining story of mixed identity. Should please most audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Suitable for any double-bill program.

Cast: Brenda Marshall, William Gargan, Hillary Brooke, George Chandler, Ruth Ford, H. B. Warner, Lyle Talbot, Mary Treen, Cay Forester, Richard Scott. Credits: Produced by William Wilder. Directed by Anthony Mann. Screenplay by Mindret Lord from a story by Anne Wigton and Lewis Herman. Photography, Robert W. Pittack.

Plot: Brenda Marshall, research chemist, has discovered a new type of anesthesia and to prove its efficacy tries it on herself. She has promised her fellow scientist, William Gargan, that she will marry him if the experiment is a success. She is burned in an explosion during the experiment and (in the dream that follows) is maneuvered out of Gargan's affections by Hillary Brooke, who wants him herself. Complications develop when Brenda is involved in a murder, undergoes plastic surgery and then is accused of murdering herself. The situation clears when she comes out of the anesthetic.

Comment: Modestly produced but with a good cast and good direction, "Strange Impersonation" progresses believably, since the story's basic premise has been established early in both situation and dialog that Miss Marshall is liable to have all sorts of dreams during her experiment. With this as an established fact it is possible to believe the coincidences that otherwise would stretch credulity. As it is, Miss Marshall, Hillary Brooke and Gargan do well and some old favorites including H. B. Warner and Lyle Talbot are fine in small but important bits. As a whole the picture will do very well in the niche evidently carved out for it—that of a supporting feature on double-bill programs.

Arch H. Jolley, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatres Association of Ontario, Toronto, is continuing his campaign against the move of the local authorities for a heavy increase in the annual license fees for projecting signs and marquees. A brief of the association brought out several examples of the augmented cost, with the argument that the levy could only be regarded as a revenue tax rather than an inspection. One Toronto theatre, for example, would have to pay $210 per year under the new code instead of the current charge of $30.

William Weiss, general manager of Allied Cooperative Theatres, Inc., Toronto, announced that the newly-formed association has secured the membership of 28 independent theatres in Ontario for buying and booking purposes. HARTFORD

All previous box-office records at E. M. Loew's Theatre, Hartford, were shattered over the past weekend by Columbia's "Bandit of Sherwood Forest."

In connection with the promotion campaign for "Bandit," E. M. Loew's Theatre conducted an essay contest, offering guest tickets to the best answers to the question: "What would you do if you were Robin Hood's son, living today?" Landers got plenty of entrants, but at this writing the question giving him most concern is: what to do about all those customers who want in when every seat in the house is occupied!

Speaking of new box-office records, Warners' Regal also hit new highs with the surprising showing of "The Daltons Ride Again." The most astonished manager in town over the week-end was Frank Morin, who had started packing them in as early as Wednesday, and Sunday, alone, turned away more than 1500 would-be patrons. It had been planned to move "Bells of St. Mary's" down to the Regal from the Strand for a third week's showing, but in the face of "Dalton" popularity, the bad boys of the early West will ride through a second Regal week with "Bells" continuing to ring at the Strand.

The "Cinderella" contest being sponsored by Jim McCarthy of the Strand, Hartford, is proving extremely popular with local lassies, more than 1000 of whom have to date entered Sage-Allen's store to try on the tiny plastic slipper. Several of the plastic slippers have been ruined by ambitious gals with over-sized feet, and Manager McCarthy was fearful about the supply holding out until contest conclusion, Wednesday, February 27. More than 50 excited girls have qualified as to fitting the slipper, so final decision will rest with the fashion editors of the Courant and Times.

Theatre managers here face a teen-age problem that probably does not bother operators in other cities, as Milwaukee has a number of former vaudeville and legitimate theatres that have been converted into movie houses. Such theatres have loges, boxes, balconies and galleries, which, although roped off to keep out patrons except the overflow, offer good rendevous for lovers, who sneak past the ropes, and aided by the semi-darkness, are hard to detect. Some such theatres are compelled to have special men on the job to dislodge such unwelcome patrons, who only laugh at lady ushers if told to vacate the unused sections of the house.

CHECK-UP ON PRODUCT IN WORK

Independent Producers Face Problem of the Lack of Studio Space; Film Companies About Evenly Divided On Production Pace, With RKO, Paramount in Lead

UNITED ARTISTS Has Three Pictures Shooting; May Be Hit by Lack of Studio Space—Although UA has three pictures before the cameras, its independent producers are worried because of lack of space. Samuel Goldwyn announced that he will take all of his studio space for his own productions and RKO Pathe also revealed that it will take on no additional commitments for independent productions. Up to now, Cagney, Seymour Nebenzal, Comet (Buddy Rogers-Ralph Cohn) and Jules Levey Productions have operated from the Goldwyn lot; and in the past, Edward Small, Sol Lesser and David Selznick have produced at RKO Pathe.

The trio of films now before the cameras include Hunt Stromberg's "The Strange Woman," starring Hedy LaMarr, and moving into the final stages of shooting; "Angel On My Shoulder," Charles R. Rogers Production; and "Mr. Ace and the Queen," Benedict Bogeaus picture, which has been retarded by the illness of George Raft.

Momentarily expected to start are Samuel Goldwyn's "Glory For Me" and Andrew Stone's "The Bachelor's Daughters." David L. Loew's "A Night in Casablanca," starring the Marx Brothers, will be released soon.

Latest addition to the UA roster is Signet Productions, whose guiding hands are Charles Chaplin and Arthur W. Kelly. The first of this unit's productions is scheduled for April shooting.

Hunt Stromberg signed veteran producer Tay Garnett to a deal whereby Garnett will produce and direct.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER Is Slowing Up on Actual Production; Illness Holds Up Big Picture—This studio is running behind its usual accelerated production tempo, with comparatively little activity in progress. Only five pictures are before the cameras. These include "Tenth Avenue Angel," starring Margaret O'Brien, which just started; "Till the Clouds Roll By," rolling into its sixth week; "You Were There," starring Robert Taylor and Katherine Hepburn; "The Showoff," Red Skelton vehicle and "A Woman of My Own."

George Cukor directs and Arthur Hornblow, Jr. produces "A Woman of My Own," most recent film on the MGM schedule. Just started, according to studio announcement, the picture stars Greer Garson and Robert Montgomery.

20TH CENTURY-FOX Lets Up a Bit on Production, but Pace Still Strong; Numerous Films Being Edited—Following the terrific pace at which this studio has been going, it was only natural that some let-up should occur in shooting. Six and seven films have been before the cameras, leading Hollywood lots by a wide margin, but this week finds four going. However, with all the shooting that has occurred in the past weeks, 20th-Fox has a good many films in the editing phase or being scored.

Still rolling is "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim," which is ended to all intents and purposes except for brushing up. This musical, starring Betty Grable and Dick Haymes, has had a long shooting schedule. "Margie," a Technicolor special starring Jeanne Crane, is progressing nicely; and "Three Little Girls in Blue," another Technicolor feature, is winding. "It Shouldn't Happen to a Dog" has finished. Just started is "Claudia and David," produced by William Perlberg.

"Forever Amber" was scheduled to start Monday.

MONOGRAM Still Dark as Far as Shooting Goes; Next Week Finds Increased Activity—This studio has been silent on the production front for a longer period than customary. However, Monday found Jeffrey Bernerd's "Don't Gamble With Strangers" going before the lensmen; and "High School Scandals," Teen-Age series release number two, gets started at th end of the week.

The next in the "Shadow" series, "The Shadow's Adventure," will roll next month. Next month is also on the docket for the King Brothers version of "The Hunted."

Lindsley Parsons has been announced as the latest acquisition by Monogram to its growing list of independent producers.

This month finds the next Cisco Kid rolling. Incidentally, Monogram has an added advantage in this series with the coming on the air of the "Adventures of the Cisco Kid," half-hour broadcast covering all Mutual stations.

RKO RADIO Maintains Large Independent Roster; Production Is Going Strong—The latest addition to the large group of independent producers releasing under RKO's banner is the combination of Charles Einfield and David Loew. The unusual number of independents now going at RKO insures not only a high percentage of reliable product, but a steady flow. This is graphically indicated by present schedules, which reveal five pictures before the cameras.

"Crack-Up," starring Pat O'Brien, finished and is now being edited. Most recent starters are "Child of Divorce" and "Sinbad the Sailor." "Double Trouble," a comedy drama, finally ended its shooting and is in the cutting room. Final recording and scoring is just about through for the LeRoy-Lasky production, "Without Reservations." The picture gets trade shown on April 15.

John Miljan, who has loaned his suave polish to gentlemanly roles in the past, will show up as a bum in RKO's "Sinbad the Sailor," Technicolor feature with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Maureen O'Hara and Walter Slezak.

RKO is rushing "Child of Divorce"

Short May Make Picture With Aid of Exhibitors

Paul Short, who holds exclusive motion picture, radio, legitimate stage, and television rights to the Frances Parkinson Keyes novels, is considering the sale of all the manuscripts, including "Crescent Carnival," "Also the Hills," "Senator Marlowe's Daughter," "Honor Bright" and others, in a package deal.

Single exception would be "The River Road," which Short may produce himself independently with the financial aid of prominent exhibitors throughout the country who have evidenced their faith in his ability by urging him to proceed with the production.

'Up in Central Park' To Be Durbin Vehicle

Universal has purchased the motion picture rights to the Michael Todd musical, "Up in Central Park," as a starring vehicle for Deanna Durbin. Production will start early in 1947 after Miss Durbin makes "Josephine," a comedy based on the play by Ferenc Molnar.

Although Todd is to produce pictures for Universal, "Up in Central Park" is to be made exclusive of this arrangement. Felix Jackson, Miss Durbin's husband, will produce.

RKO Stock Company Now Numbers 47

RKO Radio Studio now has a stock company of 47 young players, 29 of them young men. Practically all of them are recruits from Little Theatres and college drama groups, with a smattering of models and cover girls among the women.

Both men and girls are training in the studio coaching school under Lillian Albertson and studying voice culture with Robert Keith. All are being familiarized with the technique of film making by playing small roles in various pictures.

Each of the three producer-directors (Capra, who is also president; Stevens and Wyler, who are vice-presidents) will personally produce and direct three productions. Briskin, as production executive, will coordinate the operation of the three units and handle the production and executive management of the company. Briskin is also vice-president and treasurer.

The four men expect to have "It's a Wonderful Life," which Capra is to make, ready for release in 1946, with the possibility of finishing another. Story rights acquired by the company include "One Big Happy Family," which Stevens will produce and direct, "It Must Be Love," "No Other Man" and "The Flying Yorkshireman."

PARAMOUNT Production Greater Than At Any Time in Past Several Months; New Contract Given Song-Writing Team—This week finds this studio rolling stronger than it has for some time, with five films before the cameras. Previous weeks have found Paramount shooting two or three. "The Perfect Marriage," a Hal Wallis Production, is finishing; "O.S.S.," starring Alan Ladd and Geraldine Fitzgerald, is a closed set because of the "top secret" nature of the production, but it is common knowledge that the picture is going along nicely.

"Danger Street," Pine-Thomas action thriller, moves into its third week. Jane Withers gets a chance to play her first grown-up role in the part of a magazine editor. Pine-Thomas plan to follow "Danger Street" with "Seven Were Saved," for which location background scenes have already been shot.

"Suddenly It's Spring," starring Fred MacMurray and Paulette Goddard, just finished its first week of shooting. Location sequences have been prepared by Director Mitchell Leisen for the film to depict the arrival of GI war brides. "Perils of Pauline" also is finishing its initial week, and is ready to go on previously selected locations.

Perhaps the most ambitious production this studio has attempted in a long while is "California," which is being edited. Some 90,000 feet of film shot on the picture will have to be whittled down by cutters to around 30,000. Incidentally, the picture marked the 50th appearance on the screen for both Barbara Stanwyck and Ray Milland.

Johnny Burke and Jimmy Van Heusen, ace song-writing team, were placed under long-term contract by Paramount. Their next assignment is "Welcome Stranger," the Bing Crosby starrer.

UNIVERSAL Has Four Pictures Going; Betters Last Week's Schedule—This studio is a bit more active now than for the past few weeks, with four pictures rolling. "Fandango" is making steady progress. The picture, produced by Edward Kaufman, promises to be a colorful presentation of the life of Rimsky-Korsakoff, famed Russian composer. Other pictures before the cameras include "Little Miss Big," formerly titled "Three Kids and a Queen"; "Inside Job"; and "Lessons in Love."

"Inside Job" started Monday and was followed next day by "Lessons." Abbott and Costello are scheduled to start this Monday on "The Ghost Steps Out," to be produced by Joseph Gershenson and directed by Charles Barton.

Just completed is "Love Takes a Holiday," with Joan Davis, Jack Oakie, and others. The film also includes a number of old-timers, which ought to be a good stunt for exploitation; they are Chester Conklin, Bill Desmond, Stuart Holmes, Gertrude Astor, Claire Whitney, George Bunny and Charlie Murray, Jr.

Universal signed Fred Brady to a long term deal. He is currently working in "Little Miss Big," which is in its second week of production. The studio also announced the purchase of the New York stage hit. "Mexican Hayride," as a future vehicle for Abbott and Costello. Plans call for Michael Todd, who produced the immensely successful Broadway show, to become an independent producer for Universal; he will not handle the screen version of "Mexican Hayride," however.

COLUMBIA Has Three Pictures Rolling; More to Go Next Week—This studio is as busy as usual, meaning about an average of three pictures before the cameras any one week. By far the most ambitious production Columbia now has is "The Story of Jolson," which is in its 106th day of production. A tremendous amount of care and detail has been invested in this picture, which depicts the life of the famous "Mammy" singer. It marks Sidney Skolsky's departure from column-writing into producing.

The other two pictures now rolling at Columbia are "Power of Attorney" and "The Return of Rusty." "The Devil's Mask," featuring Anita Louise and Jim Bannon, finished last week; and "One Life Too Many," directed by John Sturges, also completed shooting.

Scheduled to start last Monday were "Gallant Journey," extra-budget special based on the life of John J. Montgomery, aviation pioneer, and "The Coffin," latest in the "I Love a Mystery" series.

"Gallant Journey" will receive excellent technical services from Col. C. A. Shoop, holder of the Distinguished Flying Cross, who is to give advice on this film. The studio is planning on using a camera-carrying helicopter to film scenes for the picture.

REPUBLIC Starts First of Unprecedented Budget Pictures Next Week; Production Up to Par—The first of this studio's three-quarters of a million dollar productions got rolling Monday when "Earl Carroll's Sketchbook" went before the lensmen. Republic will follow this effort with several other similar big-budget offerings.

Roy Rogers' latest, "My Pal, Trigger," should finish around the middle of March. Also shooting at this time are "The Twisted Circle," which started last week, and "Santa Fe Uprising," first of the Red Ryder series with Allan Lane as the star. "Circle," produced by William O'Sullivan, includes Adele Mara and William Frawley in the player lineup.

BEWARE, VAN JOHNSON! Producer Dore Schary (right) beams on Guy Madison, hailed as a current threat to Van Johnson's popularity, who makes his film debut as a co-star with Dorothy McGuire in RKO Radio's "Till the End of Time."

"Rendezvous With Annie," to star Eddie Albert, is the next large-budget film to go. It rolls March 11.

"The Scarlet Shadow" serial has been changed to "The Crimson Ghost." Ron Davidson will produce and William Whitney and Fred Brannon will serve as co-directors. It will start late this month.

Olive Cooper is working on the final screenplay for the initial Gene Autry picture, scheduled to roll next month.

The fourth picture now working for this studio is "The Fabulous Suzanne," a Steve Sekely Production. This film will have the distinction of shooting in four studios before it is completed, due to lack of studio space. The cast includes Barbara Britton, Bill Henry, Rudy Vallee, Otto Kruger and Veda Ann Borg.

PRC Plans to Make Come-back in Production This Month; One Picture Already Going—This company, dormant for such a long time, plans to start six films during March. One, "Avalanche," is already going and is virtually completed. This picture was the first made by PRC's new affiliate, Imperial Films, with Pat DiCicco at the helm. The cast of "Avalanche," which has been shooting on location at Alta, Utah, includes Bruce Cabot, Roscoe Karns, Helen Mowery, Veda Ann Borg, Syd Saylor and Harry Hays Morgan.

WARNER BROTHERS Remains Same on Production Matters; Three Films Being Photographed—This studio is still running slowly, with only three pictures going. "Humoresque" and "The Sentence" have both been in production for some time, while "A Very Rich Man" moves into its fourth week. This means a surprising lack of new material before the cameras. As long as the company has so many properties produced and yet to be released, however, it can rest on its past production laurels.

"Life With Father" is the most likely picture to start. Originally set to start this week, there is now no definite date, but it can be expected to roll any day.

"The Sentence" spent its sixth week on location at San Francisco, where ferry boat scenes were shot with Ann Sheridan and Kent Smith. Director Vincent Sherman also used San Francisco newspapermen for reporter roles in the picture.

"Humoresque" had three units shooting simultaneously in its ninth week of production.

HAL ROACH Starts First Picture; May Help Independents—Roach sends his first film into production since his entrance into service. "The Fabulous Joe" is scheduled to roll Monday.

The veteran producer may allow independents to rent space on his newly renovated lot, which would clear up the production problem considerably for some of the independent producers. Plans are being drawn for two additional shooting stages, which makes a total of seven on the lot.

INTERNATIONAL Acquires Small Property; Plans for Early Release—Edward Small, formerly an independent producer releasing through United Artists, sold his "Bella Donna" to International and will produce the picture. This is part of the company's recently announced expansion program to make eight films during 1946, to be released through the newly formed United-World Pictures.

Meanwhile, "The Dark Mirror" continues to roll, after a siege of illness which held up production several days. The picture will probably be completed around the first of next month.

the SHOW BUILDER

A Monthly Feature Dealing With Practical Ideas for Booking And Exploiting

The Short Subject

Paper Sponsors Reel

Something new has been added in Caldwell, Idaho, where a local newspaper sponsors the American Theatre's newsreel, receiving credit on all issues. In return, Manager Irving Simpson gets a two-column itemization of the reels' contents, plus a weekly program column, all for free. Going further, Simpson picks up program type and uses it on government postcards which go to all rural box-holders.

Lewis J. Valentine Debuts In 'Crime Newsreel' Series

Lewis J. Valentine, former Police Commissioner of New York City, has made his debut as a screen actor in "The Crime Newsreel," a short feature and the first of a series now being produced by American Newsreels, Inc., which has Valentine under contract.

Several issues of the new series have been completed and as many more as possible will be finished before the former police head leaves for his assignment with General Douglas MacArthur in Japan to re-organize the civil police system in that country. While in Japan Valentine's contract with American Newsreels will be inactive.

Sportsmanship Series Scheduled by Warners

A series of "Good Sportsmanship" shorts designed to combat the type of "Hitler Youth" movements depicted in "Hitler Lives?" has been placed on the Warner Bros. schedule by Jack L. Warner, executive producer.

First of the subjects, to be produced by Gordon Hollingshead, will be a Technicolor one-reeler tentatively titled "Tennis Town," to be made with the cooperation of Perry Jones, secretary of the Southern California Lawn Tennis Association.

To Cover Bomb Tests

Robert E. Donahue, Sr., RKO Pathe News cameraman and veteran of 30 years of newsreel coverage, is said to be the first newsreel cameraman to leave on assignment to cover the much-discussed atomic bomb tests in the South Pacific, to be known as "Operation Crossroads." He expects to be gone about five months.

Carney's Kiddie Show

Bob Carney, manager of the Lyric in Bridgeport, Conn., put on a triple feature as a special Washington Birthday show this year. Shown were: "Palooka," "The Gentleman From Arizona" and a long animated film review. The children also were given free funny books.

Malneck Completes Short

Matty Malneck and his orchestra have finished their recordings for the Universal short subject being produced by Will Cowan.

Turner Exploits 'People on Paper' Above the Program's Main Feature

It isn't often that a short subject gets more exploitation attention than the feature, but Arthur Turner of the Parsons Theatre, Parsons, Kan., got an idea when he booked MGM's John Nesbitt short: "People on Paper" along with "The Corn Is Green." "People on Paper" tells the inside story about cartoonists and their work; so, thinks Turner, considering that the greater part of our population reads the funnies, this short ought to drag them in if they know about it.

Turner concentrated on the audience appeal of the cartoonists and their strips—familiar names to everyone. Therefore, in his advertising he stressed the names of the following who appear in the short: Milton Caniff (Terry and the Pirates); Chester Gould (Dick Tracy); Al Capp (Li'l Abner); Fred Lanswell (Barney Google and Snuffy Smith); Harold Gray (Little Orphan Annie); Frank King (Gasoline Alley); Raeburn Van Buren (Abbie & Slats); Bud Fisher (Mutt and Jeff); Dick Calkins (Buck Rogers); Chic Young (Blondie); H. H. Knerr (Katzenjammer Kids); Harold Foster (Prince Valiant); and Ham Fisher (Joe Palooka).

Just running your eye through that bunch of names gives you the same impression as an all-star cast, a fact of which Turner took full advantage. He even played up the courtesy lines to the various syndicates with which the producers had made arrangements.

Ten days before opening, the local paper, which has both "Blondie" and "Li'l Abner," was prevailed upon to run the strip together with this copy between: "See Blondie and Li'l Abner and their creators in John Nesbitt's 'People on Paper' at the Parsons Theatre, etc." This was carried right through to the opening gratis. As you can imagine, such a direct aid was invaluable.

Carrying out the same general idea in the matter of copy, Turner then had 1000 handbills inserted in comic books which went on the stands six days before opening date, with another batch handed out house-to-house. This, too, could be considered direct action.

Two other methods also proved effective: schools cooperated with announcements encouraging all art students to see the film and Turner contributed an article to the newspaper's "Picture of the Week" department, in which he did some plain and fancy gushing about the Nesbitt film.

On the theatre proper Turner set up a false front using comic strips for background, a one-sheet, 8x10s, catchlines, and four large paintings of comic strip characters. In large letters across the entire front was carried: "John Nesbitt's Passing Parade, People on Paper." The burden of the message for "The Corn Is Green" was carried on the marquee.

SELLS MOUNTIES. This special lobby set piece by Edward May, Rosetta Theatre, Miami, apparently is a clever adaptation of a standard 3-sheet poster surrounded by stills and art work to make an effective sales accessory. Setpiece was used two weeks in advance of serial opening and used on sidewalk before opening hours and on playdates.

Gets Bus Cooperation On Pete Smith Short

Manager Arthur Turner of the Parsons Theatre, Parsons, Kansas, thought the Pete Smith Specialty, "Bus Pests" so good he decided to back it up with more than just faith—and judging from reports emanating from the Parsons' box-office, Turner was not alone in his belief.

He concluded a tieup with the city bus company whereby for four days in advance of the two-reeler's run at the theatre all city busses displayed sign cloth banners carrying the following copy: "It's Howling, Hilarious, a Laugh Riot! See Public Enemy Number One, 'Bus Pests'."

A sign with similar copy was displayed across the interior back of the bus, and another just above the windshield, also on the inside of the bus.

Short also received a review in the local daily.

New Smith Specialty Starts

"Treasures From Trash," the newest Pete Smith Specialty in which "a Smith named Pete" produces and narrates, has gone before the cameras with Dave O'Brien as director, writer and star. Harry Lachman, film director, artist and owner of a string of patio shops about which the action evolves, will appear in the MGM short.

Lantz Cartune Sets Record

Walter Lantz's Cartune, "Poet and Peasant," will play 12,000 theatres, setting a new all-time record for any of this Universal producer's releases.

Clyde Short in Work

"Andy Plays Hookey," two-reel comedy starring Andy Clyde, is now before the cameras at Columbia with Ed Bernds directing. Hugh McCollum produces.

THE SHOW BUILDER

BACKGROUND STAGE DISPLAY. Prominent cut-out lettering plugging "The Monster and the Ape," is seen here just above the heads of the professional master and mistress of ceremonies as they read their scripts via station WWSW, Pittsburgh, as part of the sponsored broadcast that takes place weekly from the stage of the Enright Theatre, before a theatre jam-packed with children who make up "the country's largest kiddie show." Each of the youngsters shown on the stage takes part in the radio broadcast and the children in the audience also are active in the Kiddie Club presentations. Lettering of the overhead stage background reads, "The Monster and the Ape," our new serial here soon. Extra-Greater Serial Thrills Than Ever Before!" Serial received prominent mention in the weekly broadcasts before its opening and during the several weeks of its presentation, as part of Lige Brien's prize-winning exploitation campaign.

Ties in With Coronet To Sell Bugs Bunny

Tieing with the December issue of Coronet, which carried a pictorial story on Bugs Bunny, Forrest Thompson of the Majestic Theatre, Dallas, slipped clever messages from Bugs into copies of the magazine at all newsstands.

Tieup was in connection with the showing of "Hare Tonic," which Thompson put over via a campaign that covered the theatre lobby, ads, marquee and screen.

Specialty to Feature Blind Men's Prowess

A group of blind men will exhibit their prowess in bowling, golf, basketball, baseball, horseshoe pitching and riding horses in the forthcoming Specialty, "Playing by Ear," which Pete Smith will produce for MGM. Film will be handled along inspirational lines throughout, with Dave O'Brien directing the story by Davis Barclay and Joe Ansen.

Lantz Sets 'William Tell' As Next in Series

Walter Lantz will make a Cartune entitled, "William Tell Overture," based on the famed Rossini composition, as one of his Musical Miniatures series for Universal. The subject, third in the new group, follows "Poet and Peasant" and "Chopin's Musical Moments." Dick Lundy will direct.

Smith Readies New Series

Pete Smith, MGM shorts subject producer, has started preparations for his next series, to mark his 16th year of picture making. Smith recently completed recording narrations for "Studio Visit" and "Equestrienne Quiz," his last two specialties for the current season.

Howard Comedy Starts

Cameras started rolling last week on Columbia's new Shemp Howard two-reel comedy, "Bad Breaks," with Edward Bernds directing and Hugh McCollum producing. Cast includes Christine McIntyre, Dick Curtis and Vernon Dent.

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

Days of '76 (Interesting)

WB (1512) Sports Parade 10 mins.

How the citizens revive the days of '76 in Deadwood, historic home of Wild Bill Hickock and Calamity Jane, supply the story for this Technicolor short directed by Andre de La Varre and narrated by Knox Manning. With the picturesque Black Hills of South Dakota as a background, a parade, with people dressed in old fashioned clothes of the pioneer days, opens the festival. Bare-back horse riding and an exciting rodeo are included among other events, and shots of native Indians doing their ceremonial dance conclude the film.

Community Sing (Fair)

Columbia (7653) Don Baker 10 mins.

The only difference between this and previously reviewed Don Baker Community Sings is the list of songs involved. They include I Should Care, Oh! Really, There I've Said It Again, Yah-Ta-Ta and Dream. With vocal assistance from the Song Spinners it provides a diverting 10 minutes.

Report on Greece (Very Good)

20th-Fox March of Time 19 mins.

The March of Time has included in its newest release a comprehensive picture of stricken Greece from its heroic resistance against the Axis to its present politically torn plight. Opening with views of ancient Greece's ruins the commentary reminds audiences that this is the seat of our present civilization and then develops the story of how Greece's present condition came about and how the various political groups are hotly opposed to each others' stands. It is clearly brought out that British and Russian

THE NEWS IN A NUTSHELL

Television Booming; Expert Says It Will Help Theatre Business

BOOMING ACTIVITY in the television field was accompanied this month by a statement from J. R. Poppele, President of Television Broadcasters Association, Inc., asserting strongly that television will be a boon to the motion picture theatre.

"The film industry can compete directly with the home broadcaster by installing theatre television equipment," Poppele declared, "and with its established wealth get a corner on many major events that lend themselves to television. Ask Mike Jacobs what he thinks about theatre television as a second outlet for his major boxing events and his smile stretches from one ear to the other.

"Furthermore," Poppele went on, "when the nation gets over the labor-management hangover which is currently giving Uncle Sam a colossal end-of-the-war headache, we may expect to see a gradual tapering off of the workweek to a point where it may, in some instances, settle at 36 or 38 hours. This added leisure will provide millions of man-hours for diversion—including more time to view television, more time to read newspapers and magazines, more time to listen to the radio and more time to spend at the movies.

"The going for television from now on should be unimpeded—and, to borrow a motion picture phrase—it should be terrific."

Evidence piled up that television progress is rapidly becoming terrific.

National Coverage This Year

Informed opinion saw national coverage by television transmitters before the end of 1946, with mass production of home receivers.

Paul Porter, chairman of the FCC, looked forward to "thousands" of additional families receiving televised programs in their homes; E. A. Nicholas, President of Farnsworth Television and Radio Company, was more definite, putting the number at 200,000 families.

Niles Trammel of National Broadcasting Company announced that NBC will begin television broadcasting on a national scale in 1946. Dr. Allen B. Du Mont of Du Mont Laboratories, Inc., and Dr. Ray H. Manson of Stromberg-Carlson Company promised quantity production of receivers by summer.

Balaban and Katz, in Chicago, have increased the program time of their television station, WBKB, by five hours weekly.

Plans are being drawn to televise major league baseball games, according to Philip Wrigley, owner of the Chicago Cubs.

Dr. George Gallup reported that the average American expects to pay about $150 for his first television set.

Paul Raibourn, Paramount economist and president of Television Productions, Inc., a Paramount subsidiary, declared sponsored advertising can easily support the cost of home television programs. He told a meeting in Washington, D. C., that the country spends more than 3 billion dollars yearly on radio, magazine and newspaper advertising; and television will compete for its part of that 3 billions. Television can compete with newspapers more effectively than radio can, since it combines sight and action with pre-existing sound, Raibourn noted.

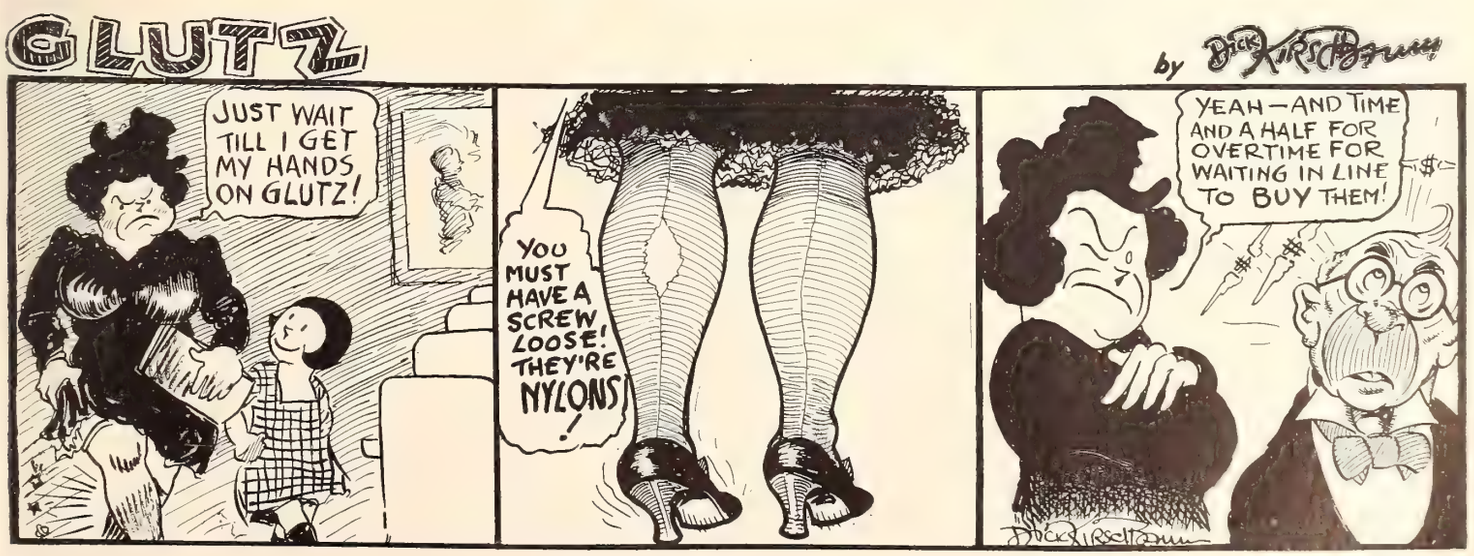
The New York Post filed applications with FCC for two new commercial television stations. Five newspapers in St. Louis, Mo., and a number in Cleveland, have applications pendings.

RCA licensed RKO-Pathe to record and distribute sound motion pictures for use in television broadcasting.

Bamberger Broadcasting Service was granted permission to erect a 300-foot television tower in Washington, D. C.

In New York, a series of educational television programs in which the New York City Board of Education will take part has been scheduled for NBC's telecasting station, WNBT. In St. Louis, the Board of Education is working on a five-year program for that city's public schools.

And Joseph Gerl, President of Sonora Radio and Television Company, agrees entirely with J. R. Poppele on the future relation between television and motion pictures: television will become "a positive asset to the film industry," Gerl declared.



More Theatre Construction

But progress in television still lagged far behind the boom in motion picture theatres. Reports of remodeling and new construction poured in at an accelerated pace. Here are a few:

Norton, Va. D. D. Query, general manager of King Coal Theatres, Inc., announces reopening of the Norton Theatre. Stanley Pope, present manager of the company's Bolling Theatre, will add the management of the Norton to his responsibilities.

Columbia, S. C. Warren Irvin and M. S. Suggs, district manager and city manager respectively for Palmetto Theatre Company, announce that the present 750-seat Ritz, in the

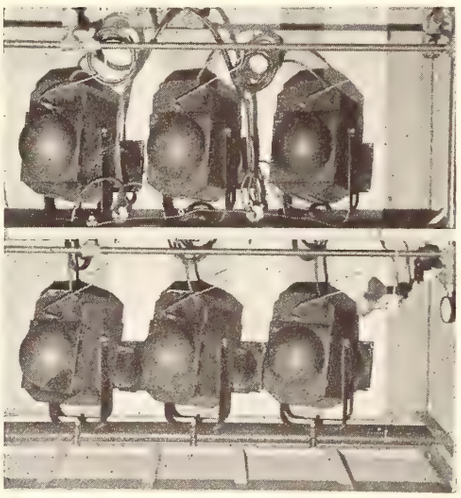
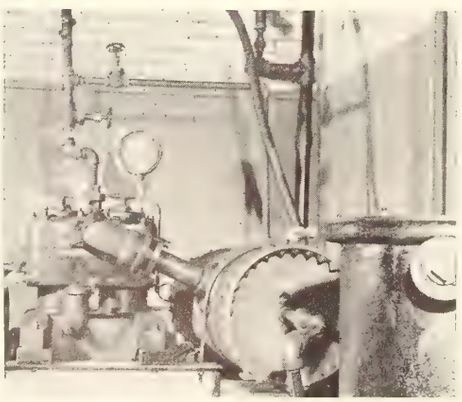
Items of Equipment, of Practical Interest to Showmen



ENDLESS ITEMS OF EQUIPMENT are used in or useful to the theatre, and they are always changing. New models appear. Improvements are made in earlier ones. Inventors, designers and manufacturers who devote their efforts to this market say: "Theatre men are on their toes, we'd better be on ours." The same is true of any magazine that aspires to keep showmen in touch with what is going on. STR has collected and here presents news of the latest developments in equipment, devices and products. Especially noteworthy is the relationship between the theatre and alien industries, two interesting examples of which will be found on these pages. Techniques or apparatus originating in other fields may become helpful to us; our own methods doubly prove their effectiveness when other industries see fit to adopt them.

BLASE NEW YORKERS STOPPED AND STARED



HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of New Yorkers, accustomed to strolling through all the lights of Broadway with scarcely a glance at them, stopped to gape in admiration at the unique lighting effect used on last December's Rockefeller Center Christmas tree. Crowds lingered nightly, reluctant to move on. The 700 multicolored plastic globes that decorated the tree gleamed as if with an incredible inner light. Herewith are presented pictures of the apparatus that produced the effect. Similar equipment, including simpler models for smaller theatres, is available to showmen. Its use is not confined to

Christmas tree decorations—almost any design, surface or object can be similarly treated. The 10-inch plastic globes seen on the tree had been sprayed with fluorescent paint supplied by Stroblite Company of New York. In the next column is shown the battery of six Kliegl ultraviolet light projectors, each of which utilized one 1000-watt air-cooled mercury-vapor tube. These projectors were installed (to protect them from the weather) in a temporary wooden shelter mounted on a setback at the second floor of the RCA Building. This is the building seen in the picture above, with shadows of the tree thrown against it. These shadows were created by floodlamps of ordinary light, in the blaze of which the plastic globes gleamed with colors that seemed to come from nowhere. The ultraviolet bombardment was entirely invisible. Below is shown the 30-horsepower

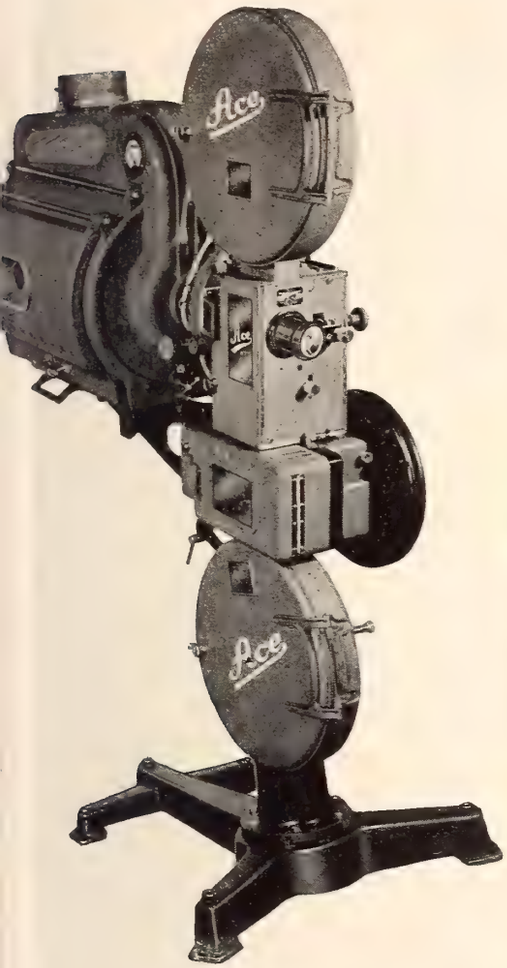
Schramm compressor that provided the airstreams for cooling the lamps. In smaller-theatre apparatus intended to produce a comparable effect it is possible to dispense with the compressor for the sake of economy by using incandescent lamps with special filters in place of the mercury-vapor tubes.

REMOTE CONTROL DIMMER

REMOTE CONTROL dimmer consisting of a single Ward Leonard vitrohm dimmer plate is driven by a fractional horsepower motor. As many as four dimmer plates can be operated simultaneously.



KILL ODORS TOO

ALTHOUGH THE HYGEAIRE sterilizing lamps shown here along the side wall of the Narrows Theatre, Narrows, Virginia, were installed only for the purpose of destroying air-borne bacteria, Manager Jack Reel found that they destroyed odors too. He had had much difficulty with foul odor during weekends when industrial and rural patronage was high. Since putting in four of these lamps, two along each side wall, Reel has been unable to notice any trace of foul odor even during "breaks" when everyone is moving toward the exits, which formerly was the worst time for this trouble. Additionally, Reel has turned out his dim lighting entirely, the Hygeaire units enabling patrons to find their seats even more effectively than the dim lighting previously used.

PROJECTOR & ACCESSORIES

THIS YEAR MARKS the full quarter century for the Wenzel Projector Company and President Fred J. Wenzel points with pride to his Ace Pro-4 mechanism, here shown. The projector, product of twenty-five years of experience, incorporates many exclusive features including the Wenzel WG-12 shock-proof drive, new slip-in type gate and new A-30 type drive shaft. Other new and improved features will be added shortly, but the manufacturer will adhere to the five-point pedestal, feeling that this type pedestal, because of its low price, still has a definite place in the industry. The Wenzel improved soundhead will be on the market very shortly. Other products of Wenzel Projector Company include a new type sprocket puller, fusible shutter links, punches, conversion type carbon holders for low intensity lamps, high speed sprocket taper pin reamers, round belting for takeups and new style adjustable tension ticket holder.

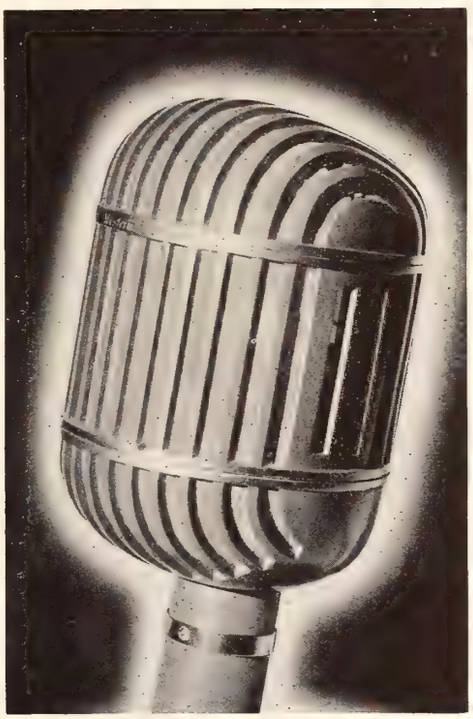
GREEK AND OLD ENGLISH

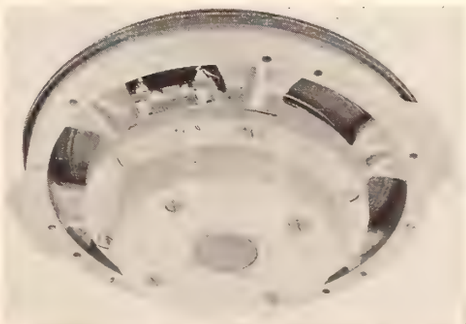
GREEK IN STYLE, these new sand urns designed especially for theatre use are available in two finishes, statuary bronze and old English, and in two sizes, 18" high and 14" high. All are heavily weighted at the base, and open readily for cleaning. They are among the postwar products of New York Brass and Wire Works Company.



SINCEREST FLATTERY

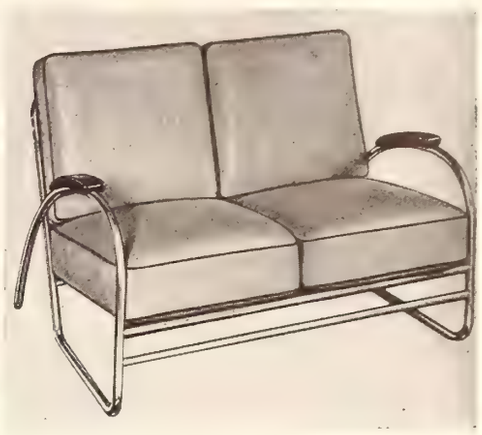
WHAT OTHER INDUSTRIES think of theatre advertising techniques and tools is evidenced by this recent installation of Wagner Changeable Letters and Frames at station KECA, Los Angeles.

FOR LIVE ENTERTAINMENT



WESTERN ELECTRIC'S NEWEST equipment for live entertainment includes the cardioid microphone shown below, a combination of dynamic moving coil unit and an improved ribbon type velocity element.

Cardioid directional performance is effective over the entire useful frequency range. The pickup angle at the front of the microphone covers at least 120 degrees, over which quality and sensitivity remain practically constant.



The new loudspeaker unit pictured below responds over a frequency range of 60 to 10,000 cycles, and is capable of handling a continuous input of 30 watts. One of these units therefore can provide sufficient volume for most theatres, and two would be adequate even for very large houses.

The equipment here shown can be used with the theatre's regular sound system amplifier. Suitable switches would substitute the microphone for the photocell and the speaker for the usual screen speakers. Or these components may be installed as parts of a completely independent public address system.

SMART AND BEAUTIFUL

THEATRE FURNITURE the like of which has not been seen since Pearl Harbor will be available to exhibitors through National Theatre Supply, who have just been appointed exclusive distributors to the theatre field of the well-known Royalchrome furniture products. The new line includes a wide variety of lounge chairs, settees, love seats, tables and lamps, and will be available upholstered both in genuine leather and in long-wearing leatherette, in colors to blend with practically any decorative scheme. Combining the natural beatuty of chrome finish with the richness and lustre of upholstery, these Royalchrome furnishings enable the manager to give his lobby and lounges an appealing "jewel box" touch, says J. W. Servies of National's sales promotion department. Additionally, Servies points out, the materials and craftsmanship are such that practically no maintenance should be needed for many years. The chromium finish will retain its lustre, and the upholstery will hold its color and richness of appearance almost indefinitely with only routine attention. Samples of the new furniture are now ready for display in National branches through the country, and deliveries to theatres will begin in the very near future.

BICARB EXTINGUISHER

UTILIZING SODIUM BICARBONATE as its active agent this new All-Out dry chemical extinguisher forms no toxic gases, supplies no conductor of electricity, is non-abrasive, and is harmless to finished surfaces. The dry chemical is ejected under pressure in a flat stream that separates the flame from the burning material and forms a dense, fire-smothering cloud. Light in weight, easily refilled without special tools, it meets the requirements of the Underwriters Laboratories.

THE SCREEN is the focal point of greatest importance to the audience."

With these words one Council member struck the keynote of this month's meeting, which was devoted to screens, and how to maintain them.

"The picture is the whole show, the only reason for operating the theatre," another member contributed. "Don't neglect anything that will improve projection, light and sound."

The audience, of course, sees the theatre front, the lobby decorations, the foyer and lounge furniture, the carpets and seating and ornamentation, only in passing. These things are very important, no showman questions that; but the screen is what holds their eyes at least 99 per cent of all the time they spend in the theatre. How to keep the screen worthy of that attention was the problem we put up to the Council.

Cleaning the Screen

Our first question—what method to use in cleaning the screen—disclosed fair unanimity of opinion. Careful brushing was the recommendation of the great majority.

Differences developed quickly when we asked what kind of brush to use.

"Soft hair brush."

"Lambs' wool brush."

"Lambs' wool mop."

"Camel's hair brush with extension handle."

"Screen brush."

"Fine bristle brush."

"Cheese cloth."

But it was agreed that whatever brush is used, it should be very clean. "Practically in new condition," one member said.

Correct use of the brush was also noted as an important point.

"It should be remembered that white screens can very easily be streaked by improper cleaning," noted one member.

"Yes, start top left and work to bottom right, then repeat," contributed another.

Among the minority who favored other cleaning methods than brushing, there was a small scattering of suggestions for washing and vacuuming.

"Warm water and Lux soap—I'm not plugging Lux soap, we've found it to be the best for screens," was one recommendation.

"Castile soap and water, but only after thorough dusting, and vacuuming from the back, with several changes of water to avoid streaking. And take only one small section at a time."

One member distinguished between screen types, suggesting use of lambs' wool mop only, for screens other than the moulded plastic type.

Two Council members favored vacuuming; and two others thought all cleaning futile, they preferred re-painting.

How often to clean the screen was our next question. On this there was little agreement. Perhaps the opinions of the members were conditioned by the geographical location and other variations in the theatres under each man's charge. The majority said: "It all depends."

One member explained: "Where screen curtains are used constantly during the day there is a possibility that dust will be raised and will gather on the screen. Where screen curtains are used only to open and close the day's performance there is less chance of this. Closing the curtain during the time the theatre is being cleaned will also tend to keep dirt from the face of the screen. Where no screen curtain is employed at any time, the screen is exposed to every instance of dust collection, and must be cleaned more regularly."

"Atmospheric conditions, particularly where oil is used for heating, are also important," another contributed.

Use or absence of filtered ventilation was suggested by a third as another important factor in determining how often a screen will need cleaning.

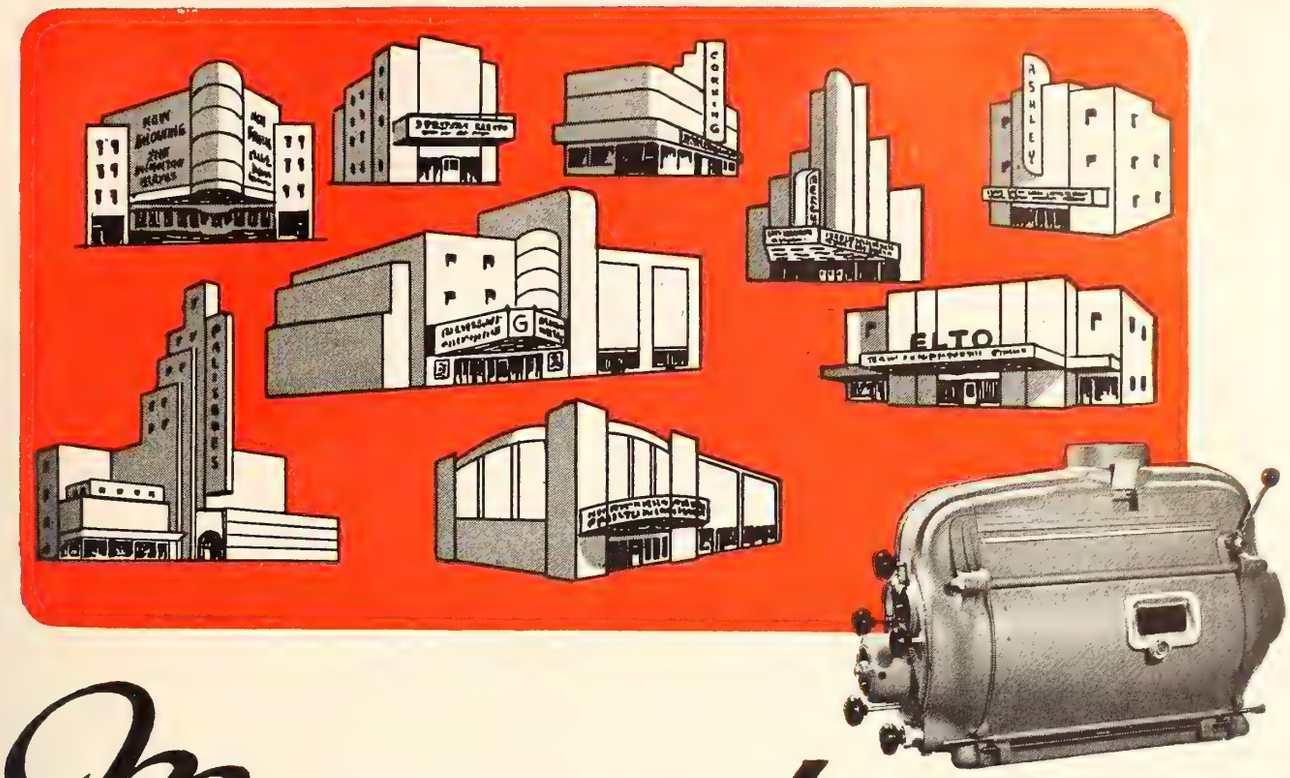
A fourth member thought the quantity of smoke and other industrial waste in the atmosphere most greatly influences cleaning frequency.

Among the minority who named definite periods of time for screen cleaning, these suggestions were offered:

"Weekly."

"Brush weekly; wash moulded plastic screen severy 6 to 10 months."

"At lease quarterly if screen curtain is used; otherwise more often."



"At least semi-annually; oftener than that in some locations."

Painting the Screen

In spite of the fact that some members of the Council actually preferred painting to cleaning the screen, the majority emphatically rejected the idea of painting under any circumstances. Our question brought a chorus of: "No." "No." "No." "No."

A minority approved of painting under

NEW THEATRES

Basic Facts About the Most Observed Surface in the Theatre

UNDER-ILLUMINATED PICTURES may be blamed on the lamphouse, or on the way the projectionist operates it, whereas the real trouble may be a dirty or discolored screen.

Inadequate sound volume may turn out to have no other cause than partial plugging of the screen perforations, either by dirt or as the result of inexpert attempts at painting or re-surfacing.

There is no item of the theatre's permanent equipment that deteriorates as fast as the screen.

Whenever the picture seems consistently lacking in sparkle and brightness; whenever the projectionist is consistently forced to a higher volume setting than is normally neessary, the screen should be checked before any elaborate investigations into the apparatus are attempted. This is particularly true where those troubles have come on gradually and are slowly increasing.

Checking the Screen

One simple way to check discoloration of the screen is to hold a large piece of plain white paper against it. If the paper is noticeably brighter than the screen, discoloration or soiling may be indicated.

However, paper differs in tint and whiteness, and this test will be more positive if it was first made when the screen was brand new, using several different papers until one is found that matches the screen. Then if a few pieces of the same paper are saved for future tests, deterioration can be determined quite accurately.

A better procedure is to save a piece of the original screen material, putting it away carefully where it will be protected against both dust and light (light helps cause discoloration). This is held against the screen, and the extent of deterioration becomes immediately apparent.

In heavily industrialized areas, in theatres that permit smoking in the auditorium, and in those that ventilate with unfiltered air, these tests should be made fairly often. Under completely opposite circumstances one test in six months may be ample, at least until the screen has deteriorated to a border-line condition.

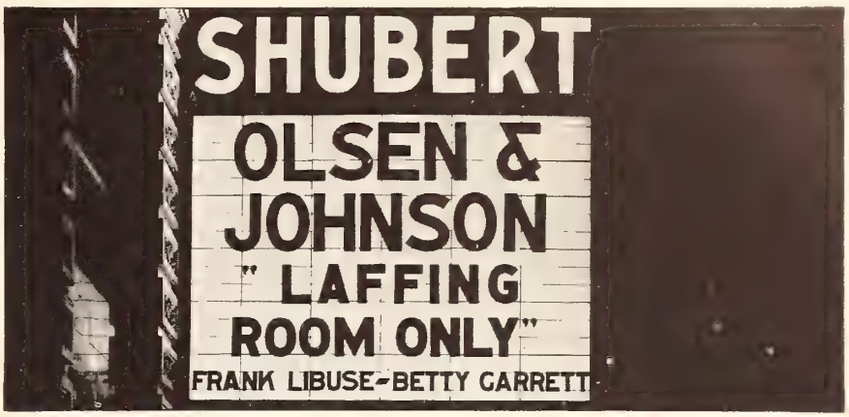
No particular test is needed to determine whether the perforations have become clogged or partly clogged with dust, and are obstructing the passage of sound. That should be evident on simple inspection. However, the inspection should not be confined to the lower parts of the screen. Use a stepladder; the upper portions may be exposed to a different set of air currents.

As a check against possibility that painting or re-surfacing has reduced the area of the perforations, keep a piece of the same screen material for comparison; or leave a small portion of the screen (behind the masking) untreated, and compare that with the painted or re-surfaced part.

No screen is equally bright from every viewing angle. Many screens are excellent diffusers; they are nearly as bright when viewed from an angle as from the center of the house. Others are strongly directional in the way they reflect light, and therefore should not be used in a wide theatre, or in one with a tall balcony—the people at the sides, and at the top of the balcony, would see a very dim picture. These strongly directional screens can be very helpful however in a long and narrow theatre, since they waste little light in the direction of the side walls and therefore give more of it to the audience.

Directional Characteristics

The directional characteristics of a screen can be determined with a light meter. The local supply dealer may have one which he uses for just that purpose. The meter is pointed squarely at the screen from a central position in the auditorium, measuring the light reflected at zero angle. Proceeding across the auditorium, other measurements are taken at angles of 5 degrees, 10 degress and so on. Persons with no training in the process should not expect to get accurate results.



Actual measurement is seldom necessary. All reliable suppliers of screens will submit figures showing the reflectivity of their products at different viewing angles. These may show a reflectivity of "more than 100 per cent" at the zero angle or at some such angle as 5 or 10 degrees. This simply means that reflection at the wider angles will be that much poorer—that the screen is concentrating a great deal of light toward the center of the house and

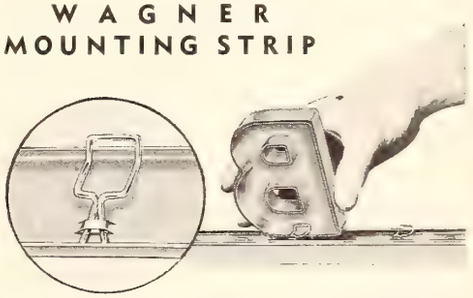
For use on the marquee or in Wagner Lobby Displays.

WAGNER LOBBY DISPLAY UNITS



Made of white enamel finished sheet steel in standard sections 7" high by 24", 36" and 48", which can be combined for any length. Easily installed, Wagner slotted plastic letters can be mounted on the bars in the middle, firmly held in standee positions at the top or suspended from the bottom by clips. Price per lineal foot visible opening, including frames, opal glass, sockets, wiring, wall plate, top and bottom mounting rail, but less lamps, $6. End pieces included at no extra cost on displays 8' or longer.

WAGNER EXCLUSIVE PATENTED MULTISIZE SLOTTED LETTERS

Hold securely in place on the bars by gravity. We do not make lug-type letters as they are unsafe, the lugs wearing down quickly and the slightest springing of the frame allowing the letters to fall out of the sign, endangering pedestrians and resulting in costly damage suits. Channels for mounting lug-type letters furthermore accumulate dirt which rain washes down over the face of the sign.

WAGNER MOUNTING STRIP

Wagner Plastic Letters can be set up many places where no other display equipment could possibly be used, by using the white enamel finished sheet steel mounting strips. No special wiring is necessary. Drilled for mounting on top of any wood surface or fastening on the under side with the letters used in suspended position.

Teamwork the Secret of Good Maintenance

Manager's Good Business Judgment Must Back Up Projectionists' Skill

By ARTHUR E. MEYER

Manager, Projection Equipment Division of National-Simplex-Bludworth, Inc., New York

PROJECTIONISTS ARE paid for looking after the maintenance of equipment; they are trained experts who understand its intricacies. But there are very many things they cannot do; things that need the application of business judgment rather than technical knowledge. To keep the screen image presented to the audience as fine in quality as when the projector was first installed requires above all definite exercise of good business judgment on the part of the exhibitor.

Projectionists do not make ultimate decisions, nor can they as a rule spend the showman's money. The man who signs the checks and whose decisions are final has a non-technical responsibility with respect to maintenance that none of his technicians can discharge for him.

To mistake this fact, or to fail in good judgment, sometimes is very expensive.

Three different items of expense are involved. In the first place, the original price of the projectors included the cost of a great many rather elaborate arrangements built into them to assure that they could continue producing the highest quality of screen image for a very long time. If the projectors don't do that because they are not properly maintained, or if they can't do it through any shortcoming of their own, the theatre in buying them paid for value not received.

In the second place, the rental price of film (as noted in a previous article) includes the cost of very expensive photographic procedures designed to produce the highest possible quality of screen images. If that quality is marred by imperfect projection, the exhibitor pays for value not received every time he pays for his film.

Most important of all is the audience, which comes to see a similitude of living, moving persons—and actually those persons on the screen don't move at all. What the patrons really see is (of course) a series of still pictures, following each other so rapidly that the appearance of motion and life are simulated. Each still is momentarily blotted out by a wave of darkness and appears again; then during a second wave of darkness it is removed from the screen and a new one substituted for it—the entranced audience doesn't want to know anything about all that; it is the very last thing they want to know about. Poor projection forces it on their attention.

If the image is streaked with "travel ghost," if the seemingly live people before them vibrate up and down, if outlines blur and waver and spots appear, or dim illumination makes seeing difficult and eyes painful—in a way that's a little like Hamlet appearing in a bathing suit. The illusion is ruined.

Costs of Poor Maintenance

There's no law to compel people to go to the theatre; strictly among ourselves and inside the trade there's a movie habit; an addiction like any other. Anything that makes movie-going more disagreeable and less pleasant tends to combat the movie habit, so that not only the theatre concerned, but the whole industry loses out through poor projection anywhere.

Poor maintenance technique on the part of the manager involves risk of all these losses.

Good maintenance with reference to screen results imposes a number of important technical requirements on the projection room staff which are matters of professional skill and competence. Few exhibitors will want to intervene in those matters except for general supervision of results and costs. Just which screws to loosen in order to put in a new bolt or gear, naturally is not the concern of the average theatre manager. He pays men to look after that; he has other things to be concerned about.

But there are two general functions of good maintenance which cannot be completely delegated.

One relates to the original selection of a new projector from the point of view of good maintenance results, as well as initially good screen results, both of these being factors that must be considered, along with factors of price, terms, trade-in and so on. If they are not thoroughly taken into account, price and so on may mean comparatively little. Price alone loses its meaning without reference to what the buyer gets for his money. There are three things the exhibitor should get for his money, with respect to the maintenance of his new projectors. These will be described in just a moment.

A second maintenance function of the exhibitor with reference to good screen results is to see that the projectors he selects actually are given the care they deserve. This is a supervisory responsibility that cannot be delegated, as will be seen later in this article. For the moment, however, let us return to those three maintenance features which the exhibitor should check in selecting his projectors originally.

Servicing Aids

The first of these is availability of effective assistance. The projectionist can be relied on for routine repairs, but his primary work is operating, not repairing; he never acquires the immense experience that comes to a man who does nothing but repair work. Neither does the projectionist have expensive special tools —he hasn't enough use for them.

So the first point in selecting a mechanism from the view of maintenance is the service that stands behind it. In the case of the Simplex E-7 projector, National Theatre Supply, a direct affiliate of the manufacturing organization, provides locally available servicing the nation over. National's projector technicians are trained in the factory methods of International Projector Corporation; all the facilities, engineering skill and experience of the factory are firmly behind them, backing them up.

Their advice and their services are trustworthy, honest. Both NTS and IPC have an enviable reputation to sustain. They do not intend to sacrifice it.

These men bring to the projection room special tools when needed. They advise and assist the theatre's projection staff. And they are universally available everywhere in the United States.

A second point about maintenance is the local availability of replacement parts. This may seem a small detail. Actually its importance in practical theatre operation cannot be over-emphasized.

Not only wear or sudden breakdown, but even a small, unimportant film fire, may make replacement of some part imperative and stop the show until that part is obtained. In the case of the Simplex E-7 mechanism, there are locally available stocks of spare parts of every kind at all the many branches of National Theatre Supply. Urgent repairs don't have to wait upon shipment from some distant city.

The third consideration in selecting a projector, from the point of view of maintenance qualities, is more complex and technical and relates to the way the mechanism is designed and the materials of which it is built.

Maintenance Design

A good projector should need as little maintaining as possible; and those repairs that are unavoidable as a result of wear should be made as simple and inexpensive as possible. In other words, maintenance should be both minimized and simplified.

As an example of what is meant by minimizing maintenance, consider the film gate guide in the Simplex E-7. It is a simple thing in itself but a design based on the principle of four flat, opposing surfaces insures that there can be no gate wobble, regardless of the number of years of use. A simple screwdriver adjustment is all the maintenance ever needed. (Gate wobble makes for an unsteady picture, since a shaky gate cannot hold the film firmly.)

Another example of minimizing maintenance lies in the use of hunting-tooth gearing in the Simplex E7. In these gears a given tooth meshes with a different tooth may be desirable in a narrow auditorium only.

There should not be more than about 20-25 per cent difference in brightness between any two seats in the theatre. Viewing angles as obtained from the architects' seating plan or from actual measurements should be compared with the diffusion figures submitted by screen suppliers.

In choosing a screen two reflective factors must be taken into account and balanced against each other—and also against price, terms, guarantees and so on. Everything else being equal the screen that reflects the most light—has the highest average reflectivity—is to be preferred; but its diffusion characteristics must also be suited to the shape of the auditorium even at the cost of sacrificing overall brightness.

Construction

Screens consist of a cloth foundation upon which various types of surfaces are applied. The surface is composed of a reflecting material embedded in a suitable binder; it may be painted or coated or moulded on the fabric.

In diffusing screens the reflecting material is a white powder such as white lead, zinc oxide, lithopone or titanium dioxide. In the more highly directional types, glass beads may be used instead. These are not so much submerged in the binder as glued to the fabric by it; glass bead screens therefore have a surface somewhat like that of sandpaper, whereas the diffusing types present a smooth and even glossy surface.

Sound screens are, of course, perforated. The reflecting surface may be applied to a perforated fabric, or perforations may be cut or moulded in the process of applying, or after applying, the surfacing material. One type of glass bead screen has no visible perforations; the glass surface is coated upon a strong, loosely woven fabric, and sound is transmitted through the screen because of the looseness of the weave. Perforations must be small, or they will be visible to the audience. Since the projector illuminates the center of the screen more brightly than the edges, perforations may be more numerous at the center; this is desirable since it tends to give the screen the appearance of being evenly illuminated all over.

Location

The screen should be as far as practicable from the front seats, so that patrons occupying those seats will not have a blurred and fuzzy image to look at.

There have been cases where a theatre owner cut through the rear wall and mounted weatherproof boxes outside to house the speakers, in order to get the screen several feet further away from the front seats.

The Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers recommends that the distance between screen an front seats should be not less than 0.87 feet for each foot of screen width. That is, if the screen is 12 feet wide, the minimum distance to the front seats should be 0.87 x 12, or 10.44 feet if viewing conditions are to be tolerable for patrons in the first row.

The picture width, on the other hand, should be equal approximately to 1/6th the distance from the screen to the last row of seats, according to the same authority. Thus, if the distance from the screen to the last seats is 72 feet, a 12-foot picture is indicated, with 10.44 feet between screen and front seats. If the distance to the last row of seats is 90 feet, the picture should be 15 feet wide, and no seats should be installed closer than 0.87 x 15, or 13 feet from the screen; and so on.

(For expert advice on how to maintain the screen in good condition, see Page 8 of this issue.)

The Theatre That Fell Into A Coal Mine

An American Success Story

JOE AND CHARLOTTE EMASHOWSKI can't be kept out of show business. Nothing can do it. They get a character loan on pure nerve and persistence, in depression time when banks aren't making secured loans. Their new theatre sinks into the ground and disappears in a coal mine collapse, a total, uninsured loss. Joe builds another theatre largely with his own hands—makes it part of the deal with the building contractor that he be hired as a workman on his own job. Joe and Charlotte are still in show business.

The Theatre That Fell into a Coal Mine

in the First Stage of Its Disappearance

It was slow times in Larksville, Pennsylvania, during the depression. The mines were mostly shut down, the miners out of work. The only theatre in town had been dark since the advent of sound. Joe and Charlotte decided they would rent the house and put in sound equipment, with the rented house saw them far into the black, and building a shining new theatre, the finest the town had ever seen. They prospered with it for two and a half years. Then cracks began to appear in the walls. Inside of three weeks the fine new theatre had disappeared under the earth. No company will write insurance against that in the coal regions—the loser is just out of luck.

Back where they started, their whole investment gone and their friend Laycok having less than the proverbial shoestring to do it with. They laid persistent, unremitting siege to Charles W. Laycok, President of the Miners National Bank of Wilkes-Barre. Ultimately he capitulated, telling his fellow directors: "Such ambition should not be killed, but encouraged."

on the other gear at each revolution. Aside from the important operating advantages of this system, it means that wear is evenly distributed and not allowed to concentrate in the development of high spots; hence the gears can be kept in service much longer.

Again, lubrication, which is absolutely vital to any mechanism, is effected in the Simplex E-7 by a "one-shot" operation. Bearings are provided with fresh oil, oil that has lost none of its lubricating qualities since it is never re-circulated or used twice. It washes, in addition to lubricating, for it is applied to the bearing under pressure and flushes through it and away, carrying along any dirt or products of friction that may have been present.

Since this lubrication is effected by pressing one lever, under-oiling, over-oiling or forgetting any single bearing becomes impossible. Every bearing is lubricated when that single lever is operated, and each one receives its proportionately correct amount of oil. This certain, positive, lubricating system necessarily reduces wear. Additionally, it eliminates the need for introducing a dripping oil can into the film side of the projector. Thus the work of maintenance does not include dismantling and cleaning oil-smeared lenses.

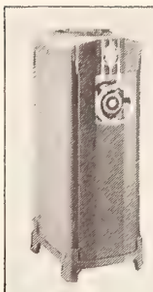
of Miners National dead, they went to William Blatchford of Franklin Federal Savings and Loan and to Adam Hildebrand of Hanover National. These men also had to argue down their own directors, but between the two institutions a new character loan was floated. Alvin J. Albertson of Wilkes-Barre took the building contract, hiring Joe and his brother Bill for all-around labor. They alone put on the roof, and did a great deal of the rest of the work including installation of projection and sound equipment—which was bought from S.O.S. Cinema Supply Corp.



Even priorities and material shortages could not stop Joe and Charlotte Emashowski. In Horace G. Cook of Wilkes-Barre they found an architect who was able to work out a design of cinder-block walls and celotex interior with which they could wangle out approval from the War Production Board.

The New Larksville Theatre opened Dec. 12, 1945, with an invocation by Rev. J. E. Gryczka of St. Hedwig's Church. Joe is, as he has been for years, his own projectionist, janitor and repairman. Charlotte again looks after booking, advertising and publicity, and sells the tickets. And the town of Larksville, once more, has a shining new theatre for the entertainment of the people.

A Pennsylvania business man who shook his head at those impossible loans and incredible obstacles finally conceded: "That's the way America was built."

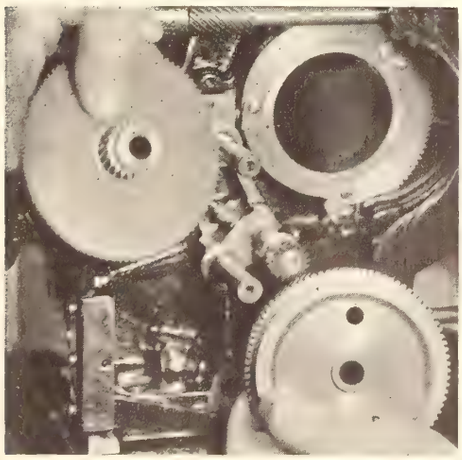
observed in titles, when white letters on a black background appear to have unsteady tails tagging below them. The picture, of course, is similarly blurred, although in the picture the cause may be less easy to identify. Impaired synchronization between shutter action and intermittent action is responsible for this condition. It never appears in a properly adjusted new projector, but only after the parts have become worn.

In the Simplex E-7 it never appears at all; no repairs are ever needed to remove it. An automatic compensatory device, involving nothing more than a screw-driver adjustment, eliminates travel ghost in any condition of wear, and this device will last and function throughout the life of the mechanism.

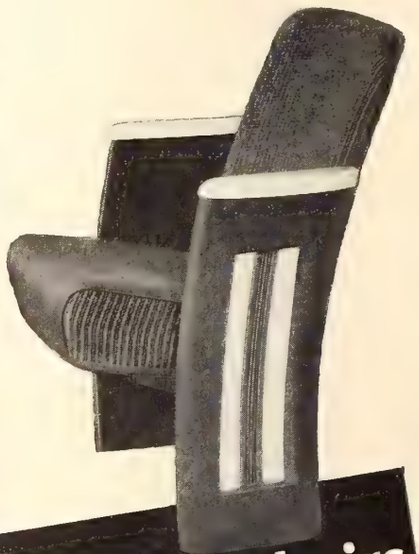
Travel ghost repairs made unnecessary in any condition of wear or long service by this automatic compensator, which needs only screwdriver adjustment.



The intense heat of modern light sources sometimes damages projector parts. The Simplex E-7 has an extremely efficient cooling system. But the blower vanes are mounted on an integral part of the rear shutter blades and therefore need no maintenance. The intermittent sprocket arm and cover are so made that they will not warp under prolonged exposure even to intense heat. Hence they will not need to be replaced because of warping.

In addition to design (and choice of materials) that minimize the need for maintenance, the projector should be so constructed as to simplify those repairs due to normal wear which are unavoidable.

An example of the kind of construction that simplifies as well as minimizes maintenance can be found in the mounting of the intermediate and main drive gears of the E-7. They revolve on, not with, their shafts; the shafts are stationary, mere studs for the gear to turn on. This not only puts the pressure of operation where wear will be least, but additionally it reduces both the work and the cost of making replacements. When gears revolve with their shafts, and the shafts in turn revolve in bushings in the main frame, friction eventually requires replacing the main frame bushings, an expensive and often a protracted job. In the E-7 arrangement, friction occurs only between the gear and the stationary shaft, usually requiring replacement of gears only, and they must be renewed from time to time anyhow, since their teeth wear down. If after lengthy operation, the stationary shaft needs replacement also, that still is a very brief and straightforward matter, not to be compared with the rebushing of a main frame.



Another example is the ease with which the intermittent movement, the heart of the whole mechanism, can be taken out of a Simplex E-7 and replaced. Regardless of the type of soundhead used or the size of its flywheel, the projector does not have to be taken off the soundhead, nor the soundhead disturbed in any way.

Similarly the rear shutter guard can be removed without disturbing the lamphouse; the sight box and film gate are taken out and replaced without using tools. The film trap is removed by loosening only two screws. Film pad tension is adjusted and locked down without removing anything and without using tools; it can be adjusted while film is running.

Maintenance is both minimized and simplified by this design, which makes gears revolve on and not with their shafts.

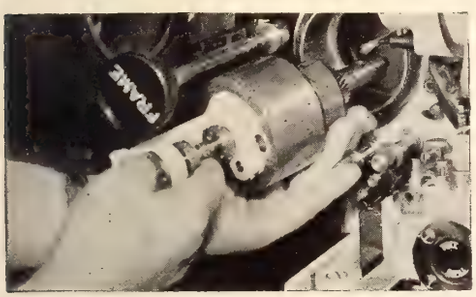
These features typify the kind of provisions a good projector should have to keep unavoidable repairs as simple and inexpensive as possible.

Caring for the Projector



The showman does not repair and maintain the mechanism—he relies on his projectionists for that. But in this respect the exhibitor has, as said earlier in this article, a supervisory responsibility. He must back up his projectionists, or they are largely helpless. Their technical recommendations should be respected. If they say the projector needs this or that, chances are excellent that it does.

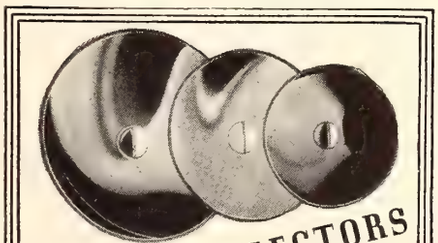
In cases of doubt, exhibitors who enjoy the advantage of the services of National Theatre Supply, have available in or near their own communities expert and trustworthy advice from an organization that couldn't conceivably afford to give any other kind.

Timely repairs preserve the audience value of the screen image, which the showman has already paid for, both in the original cost of his equipment and in the rental price of his pictures.

Repair vs. Replacement

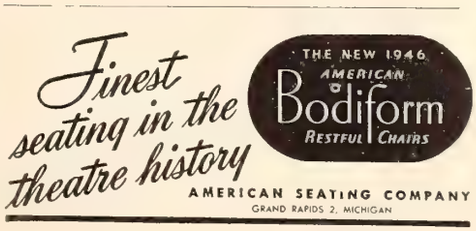
The final point in maintenance is reached when further repairs become financially inadvisable.

Intermittent is removed and replaced without disturbing projector-soundhead alignment.

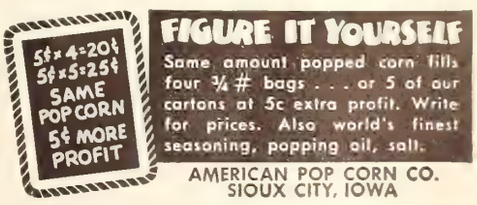


A projector can go on working almost for eternity if overhauled and rebuilt often enough, but the cost of those repairs accumulates, the trade-in value goes down. A time arrives when it is better business to collect the remaining trade-in-value—to invest a certain sum in increasing the equipment assets of the enterprise, rather than having to report the same as profit—and to enjoy the advantage and low cost of trouble-free operation for the next few years.

In addition, older projectors, no matter how well maintained and repaired, never could and never will give the kind of screen picture obtainable from an ultra-modern model such as the E-7.



Determining the point at which replacement should take the place of further repair is necessarily one of the management functions of intelligent maintenance



The purely technical advice and opinions the theatreman needs in coming to his decision are available to him through his own projectionists and through reliable organizations of the type that have been in business a long time, intend to stay in it, and therefore can never afford to oversell. The good business judgment required he must supply for himself.

STR Advisory Council

some conditions, and a few approved it absolutely.

One member of the majority group explained: "I know of no prepared paint that can be used successfully on screens. The possibility of establishing a good bond on the surface of screens as furnished by manufacturers today is almost nil, if we are talking about ordinary paint. Further, paint adds considerable weight to the screen structure, which was measured for sound attenuation in its original condition. Still further, it is not possible to paint a screen without diminishing the perforated areas through which the sound must pass."

Although the majority agreed with this member's conclusion, they did not attempt to add to his arguments, but confined themselves to a flat and emphatic "No paint."

Among the fairly strong minority that dissented, there were those who thought painting is sometimes economically justified, and a still smaller number who approved of it absolutely provided it is properly done.

Minority Report

"Yes, in subsequent-run houses of small capacity and small grosses," said one member.

"In less profitable theatres, if there is ample light available," was the opinion of another.

"As a temporary expedient, for economy, but even then only if done by experts," conceded a third.

The still smaller group that approved painting in general offered these comments:

"Yes, if done by experienced crew."

"Screens can be successfully re-painted if the work is done by an expert, but amateurs should not attempt this job."

And one member added: "I am not in favor of painting, but we have not found a satisfactory way to really clean the screen, and this sems the only method left for renewing its original reflective qualities."

Among those who did approve of repainting screens there was fairly general agreement that the number of times a screen can be painted depends entirely on just one details—how successful the painters are in keeping the perforations open.

One thought there is no limit to the number of times a screen can be painted "providing a good job is done" but this member found little support. Other estimates were:

"Three to five times."

"At the most, half a dozen times."

"Some of our screens have been repainted as many as four times."

"Eight times—twice a year for four years."

One member, however, expressed the view that "the life of the paint job decreases faster with each painting."

Many other items of screen care still remained to be discussed when the meeting adjourned. Next month's meeting will go into such details as re-surfacing screens, wartime improvements, and choosing the correct screen size for each theatre and each proscenium.

PICTURE OF MISERY

Westinghouse Scholarship Winner John William Hines at a Liberated German Concentration Camp.

AFTER GRUESOME EXPERIENCES photographing German concentration camps for the Army, youthful Corp. John William Hines of Wilkinsburg, Penna., has returned to Carnegie Tech to resume his studies under a Westinghouse War Memorial scholarship.

At one prison camp near Leipzig they found the smoldering remains of a barracks which had housed some 300 men, most of them political prisoners. From the only survivor found, he learned that before the Germans abandoned the place they had herded all the prisoners inside the wooden building, saturated the whole structure with acetone, and set it afire. Prisoners who escaped the fire were machine-gunned.

USEFUL BOOKS

Profuse wealth of information on building, remodeling and repair can be found in Don Graf's Data Sheets. All types of building materials, and their uses, are covered in detail. Fourteen pages are devoted specifically to the motion picture theatre: to floor plans, floor slope, seating plans, screen width, projection room plans and the stage; but the entire book relates to structural materials and equipment of importance to the theatre manager. Heating equipment, roofing, acoustic materials, septic tanks, washroom equipment, exit doors are only a few of the many subjects dealt with.

This immense range of subject matter is treated in two ways to suit the needs of both layman and architect. Simple presentation in layman's language is often followed by complex technical detail; so that each reader can take from these pages as much or as little information as his own background enables him to absorb.

With Graf's Data Sheets on his bookshelf any theatre manager should be able to consult far more effectively with his architect, contractor or repairmen.

Westinghouse Forms Engineer Group to Install Sterilamps

A NATIONWIDE organization of independent distributors to serve as application engineers and as sales and service outlets for the Sterilamp, a bacteria-killing device, has been created by Westinghouse Lamp Division.

Consisting of a slender electronic tube made in numerous sizes and shapes, the Sterilamp contains a mixtures of gases and mercury vapor which, when excited by a current of electricity, produces the wave lengths of invisible ultraviolet lethal to bacteria, molds and viruses.

The purpose of the new Westinghouse engineering and distribution set-up was explained by C. W. Flood, Jr., manager of the Sterilamp department. "To obtain proper benefits in air disinfection," Flood asserted, "more than a lamp and a fixture are required—the right lamps must be placed properly under the right conditions. Bactericidal ultraviolet has opened up a new industry requiring specialists in ultraviolet engineering."

The distributors will have on their staffs engineers trained to recommend proper application of bactericidal ultraviolet as well as to provide a service assuring continuance of its effectiveness. Distributors and their engineering staffs convened in Bloomfield, in December for a three-day conference at which distribution policies were coordinated and application engineering panels were conducted.

During World War II, Sterilamps were used to reduce crossinfections in Army and Navy camps here and abroad. They stood guard in the nation's pharmaceutical laboratories, where every known scientific precaution is taken against contaimination. They helped in combatting mold and bacteria growth in food processing plants, in food stores and even in domestic refrigerators; and have reduced the danger of respiratory infections in poultry houses, brooders and animal barns.

"More important, however, is the role bactericidal ultraviolet will play in the public health field," Flood believes. "We visualize that in the future air disinfection may prove to be as important as water supply purification."

In most cases, Flood said, the firms appointed as distributors are handling only Westinghouse bactericidal ultraviolet lamps. Serving as "ultraviolet headquarters" in the various trading centers of America, they can provide close-to-home service for architects, engineers, theatremen and others.

DDT Helpful in Theatre

DDT, miracle chemical, is proving highly satisfactory in the theatre, according to Mel Glatz, Denver purchasing chief of Fox Intermountain Theatres.

Following test experiments in four situations, Glatz reports success with flies, bedbugs, water-bugs and other theatre pests. Chemical is proving easy to use, if instructions are carefully followed.

Pressure gun for spraying is being circuited over the territory, Glatz advises.

MARQUEE TIP

Many theatremen lay out their marquees by having inventory lists printed or mimeographed of all letters, words, punctuation, etc. in each size. As an example, here are the first six letters of a font totaling 200 letters, each letter written as many times as there are units of that letter in your font. Thus:

A A A A A A A A A A
B B B B
B B B B
C C C C C C C C
F F F F F F

In making up new copy for the marquee, circle each letter which is in your current sign and run a vertical line through each letter you need for the new sign. Those which have both a circle and a vertical line therefore remain for use with the new billing, and those having only a circle are returned to the storeroom, while letters marked with the vertical line and no circle are needed from the storeroom to make up the new sign. Following this simple procedure will save much time and effort otherwise lost running to and fro between store room and marquee.

ANIMATION

Danny's cautioning forefinger wags right while his eyes roll left, and vice versa. Executed by Max Fine for the New York Paramount, this attention-puller operates through a simple steel rod eccentric lever and a fractional horsepower motor. The effect fascinates the eyes of some youngsters who halt to admire wag in synchronism with Danny's.

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

interests clash regarding Greece and indicates that the British have more than an altruistic interest in the country than stated by that government as an excuse for maintaining troops there. The film develops so many themes, in addition to presenting to American audiences the desperate plight of Greece's people, that they cannot be listed here. It is, however, a highly educational exposition of what is going on and undoubtedly will clarify cause and effect, regarding Greece, in the minds of everyone who sees it. The short has unlimited exploitation possibilities.

Headline Bands (Very Good)

(2605) Melody Masters 10 mins.

A compilation of music by the bands of Woody Herman, Larry Clinton, Jimmy Dorsey and Vincent Lopez, this Melody Master features Rubinoff and his Violin and is highlighted by an especially good rendition of Old Man Mose by the inimitable Betty Hutton when she was the featured vocalist with Lopez. The short has exceptionally good musical entertainment and certainly deserves prominent billing as a box-office attraction in any theatre where it is shown.

Catnipped (Amusing)

Col. (7601) Flippy Cartoon 7½ mins.

Flippy, the young bird, proves his point that his wiles are more than a match for the cat's cunning and the dog's brawn. The Technicolor short is action from start to finish, with Flippy's antics driving the dog and the cat into constant battles. Satisfactory booking on any program.

Spook to Me (Funny)

Col. (7435) Andy Clyde 17 mins.

Andy Clyde is leader of a kid's organization, Blood Hound's Pack No. 1, and demonstrates pseudo bravery for the kids. They camp next to a haunted house in the woods and Andy and the kids enjoy a high old time when the counterfeiters inhabiting the house attempt to scare them off with all sort of invented supernatural antics.

A Hit with a Miss (Good)

Col. (7434) Shemp Howard 16 mins.

Howard, a waiter with pugilistic ambitions who can fight only when he hears a band play Pop Goes the Weasel, hears it often enough as played by his manager's screwball violinist, and thus fights for the championship. The story is simply an opportunity for Howard to display his own type of comedy, and his mugging in this one is funny.

Cavalcade of Archery (Good)

Warner Bros. (1513) Sports Parade 10 mins.

The short opens with Technicolor shots clipped from a much more ambitious Warner Bros. feature, showing Merrie Old England during the days when Robin Hood carried off all honors at archery. The scene shifts to the present and shows Howard Hill, famous archer, demonstrating his prowess with a bow and arrow. He probably would have taken all bets from Robin Hood or any other of the top archers of long ago. The short winds up with Hill shooting an apple and a prune off the head of an assistant, going the William Tell hero one better.

"Voice of Theatre Speakers"
JOE HORNSTEIN has it!

Short Inspires Front-Page Story

Warner's two-reel featurette, "Hitler Lives?" dealing with the ever-present Nazi menace, was used as the basis for a front-page feature story in the Boston Herald, which tied in the subject with the recent U. S. Army poll in which GIs expressed themselves on the Hitler regime.

Written by Bill Cunningham, nationally known columnist and commentator, the story also was syndicated to 65 other papers. Cunningham also did a column piece on "Hitler Lives?" in which he said in part:

"The moral is powerful, the treatment unforgettable. The picture should be seen by every civilized human being and then seen again at regular intervals for the next 25 years, or maybe 125."

Svengali's Cat (Amusing)

20th Century-Fox (6510)
Mighty Mouse Terrytoon 7 mins.

Mighty Mouse investigates the mysterious disappearances of mice by the score to discover that a high-powered hypnotist, leader of a gang of cats, has mesmerized a terrified damsel, who sings and lures other mice to their doom. The cat gets away in a flock of peculiar airplanes which Mighty Mouse battles in a Technicolored sky, defeats them all and swoops down to save the lovely damsel from a horrible fate in a menacing sawmill.

Sing and Be Happy (Very Good)

Universal (1381) Series No. 1 10 mins.

This is a new type musical embodying a story with a community sing. Jane Pickens is shown in her boudoir expecting her dream man back from overseas. As she sings, the accompanying words are superimposed on the screen with Miss Pickens turning directly to the audience and inviting them to accompany her. The songs form an integral part of the narrative and include, I Never Knew, I'll Be Walking With My Honey and I'll See You in My Dreams.

Swing High, Swing Sweet (Entertaining)

Universal (1307) Name Band Musical 15 mins.

Jan Savitt and his Orchestra provide the basis of musical entertainment in this assisted by Ella May Morse, who sings Cow Cow Boogie; the Delta Rhythm Boys who do What a Difference a Day Made and Joan Fulton singing Sing, Everybody Sing. Miss Morse also delivers All I Do Is Dream of You and the maestro himself highlights the short with violin presentations of Fiorello's Caprice in D Major and Paginini's Caprice. The whole short is well produced and pleasingly presented in several different settings.

Pins and Cushions (Interesting)

20th Century-Fox (6301)
Paul Douglas Sports 8 mins.

The fine points involved in bowling are shown by Joe Falcaro with trick set-ups and by straight demonstrations of slow-motion form by which the champ shows the flick of the wrist and other points involved in delivering the strike ball. Andrew Ponzie, former pocket billiard champ shows some of the trick shots he has used around the country in exhibitions with Charles Peterson, who also demonstrates a few of his own.

Peeks At Hollywood (Interesting)

Warner Bros. (2405) Vitaphone Varieties 10 mins.

This is a variation on the "behind the scenes" business and shows two young starlets at Griffith Observatory looking at Hollywood from the vantage point available there. They see the forecourt of Grauman's Chinese Theatre; Ken Murray as a screwball artist; Arthur Lake (Dagwood Bumstead), Hal Peary (Gildersleeve), Earl Carroll and some of his girls; Virginia Weidler, Jane Withers and Errol Flynn in more or less intimate poses.

Bad Bill Bunion (Funny)

20th Century-Fox (6506 Mighty Mouse Terrytoon 7 mins.

Mighty Mouse's invincibility defeats the machinations of Technicolored Bad Bill Bunion in a dance hall, a train hold-up, a stage coach episode with the favorite actress of the West saved from a gory fate. The actress scene in which a "ding dong bell" sequence is included is one of the funniest cartoon scenes to be shown in a long time.

Who's Who in the Jungle (Good)

20th Century-Fox (6506) Terrytoon 7 mins.

Gandy Goose and his companion, the cat, are deep in the heart of a Technicolored African jungle when their plane is met by skunks, lions, leopards tigers and other denizens of the veldt. Gandy and the cat find themselves hunted instead of the hunters and make their get-away in their plane just in time to escape the more ferocious beasts, only to find that the skunks have taken over their airplane.

Baseball Bugs (Very Funny)

Warner Bros. (1726) Bugs Bunny 7 mins.

The inimitable Bugs Bunny fancies himself a top-notch ball player and when he sees a tough gang trying to beat his home team through trickery he takes a hand, or rather nine pairs of hands, in the Technicolored game, playing all positions simultaneously (or so it seems so help us). Bugs has his hands full but he does it—that's what the man says!

Maestros of the Comics (Interesting)

Universal (1366) Person-Oddity 9 mins.

Four outstanding comic artists are shown at work and the short then goes into a visual explanation of the mechanics of their reproduction in newspapers. The artists are Walter Berndt, creator of Smitty and Herby; Milton Caniff, author of Terry and the Pirates; Harold Gray, creator of Orphan Annie and finally Bill Holman who draws Smokey Stover.

To the Exhibitors of America:

We believe the return of "Rebecca" will be a signal event in America.

So far as my own knowledge goes, never has there been such an ever-growing and world-wide insistence for the re-presentation of a great motion picture. From the five continents this demand has reached proportions beyond precedent. Foremost, of course, our own American audiences who have seen "Rebecca" and are eager to re-live this never-to-be-forgotten romance.

Surveys reveal also that there exist millions of new customers impelled by word of mouth to see this picture . . . more new customers than for any other motion picture classic, with the possible exception of David O. Selznick's "Gone With The Wind."

The suspenseful thrill of "Rebecca" has been well remembered.

Wanted, Competition

Nothing would give this industry the pepping up it needs as would some real competition in the form of one or two more national distributing organizations. Such new units would provide the much needed outlet and encouragement to independent producers to go ahead and make pictures.

As the setup now stands, Mr. Theatreman has to do business with the existing ten companies or so and generally at their terms. If he had a much wider circle of distributors to choose from his business would be far more in demand than it is now. In plainer language; it would ease a seller's market into something more like a buyer's market and, for the first time in too many years, the exhibitor would be a respected customer again.

More distributors, in our opinion, would make for a better industry from every angle. True, just a few would no longer dominate. Nor would some of the present distributors find the going so easy that they can continue to sell turkeys instead of box-office pictures just as easy as the companies with top product.

And why would any of the better companies object to a wider group of distributors? They would still find a tremendous demand for their pictures because when the merchandise is good the theatre is anxious to buy it.

No producer or distributor of good pictures need ever fear competition. So long as they made box-office product and offered it at fair and equitable terms, there would always be a market for them.

But—and this is a big "but"—those companies that were turning out the turkeys might find themselves stuck with a lot of pictures and very little playing time. Would that be bad? We think not. They'd simply have to get busy and make better pictures. And that would be good.

The distribution setup of this industry has been stagnant for too many years. It needs new life and new competition. Industry progresses through expansion and moving ahead. When any important phase of it stands still, the whole industry suffers or becomes too lopsided. The strength is unfairly divided. The market is too stilted for the good of everybody concerned.

With a larger number of distributors, more pictures, not less, should be the net result. And with more pictures, the exhibitor has a wider field for selecting his product and on terms much less dictatorial. It would come closer to striking the even balance this industry sorely needs if it is to avoid the pitfalls of government interference or regulation from one source or another.

The TAC Meeting

The very evident attempt to smear the forthcoming TAC meeting in St. Louis clearly indicates, to us, that the possibilities of this new organization are so good that its opponents will go to any lengths to try and sabotage it if they can.

Mr. Independent Exhibitor, don't let anyone make your decisions for you. If the TAC holds any advantages worthy of your support, then attend the meeting in St. Louis and find out, first hand, the things you should know and then decide for yourself whether or not it will do an overall job for you and for all other exhibitors.

No group or groups are justified in throwing smoke screens around this attempt to organize, nationally, the exhibitors of this country unless they are afraid that the success of TAC may show up their own puny efforts to do the job that they are supposed to do.

Just as the distribution setup of our industry has been stagnant too long, so have the exhibitor organizations. It is our honest opinion that the existing organizations are falling short of their goals. If competition from a new group will stir them up then, if for no other reason, the TAC is a good thing.

Give Your Showmanship

There have been reports that the forthcoming Red Cross drive by the industry will be a "tough one to handle." With that we don't agree at all. It is true that many theatremen feel that the public has been overpressured in drives during the war and there is likely to be a reaction adverse to the theatres that take up collections now. However, there are circumstances under which that which might seem detrimental actually becomes a boon. We believe the Red Cross campaign is in the latter category. People everywhere in this country regard the Red Cross as an organization they must support and gladly will support it. Such a condition makes it downright good business for a theatre to lend itself to such a community event as a Red Cross campaign. On top of the "good business," of course, there is the great humanitarian purpose to which showmen can devote their heaven-sent talents for influencing masses of people.

We are quite sure that the rank and file of theatremen over this country are going into this campaign with every intention to give it their very best. Since that is the condition, it naturally follows that the industry is going to do a bang-up job for the Red Cross.

—"CHICK" LEWIS

Theatres Line Up for Red Cross Drive

Exhibitors Tell Why They Believe Showmen Should Aid the Red Cross

North, South, East and West, theatremen associated with independent single-unit operations, circuits and affiliated chain theatres, are backing the forthcoming Red Cross drive by the motion picture industry with their most energetic showmanship according to direct statement to Showmen's Trade Review. Following are some of the typical expressions of practical, down-to-earth theatre executives regarding plans and their opinion of the duty of theatres to support the drive with aggressive campaigning.

"It's going to take showmanship to put this drive over. But the industry can do it. The public has been called on continually to give during these past years and they gave, for the giving was in good cause.

"Today the giving is still in good cause, but there may be some weariness on the part of the public and some weakness in the public pocketbook. It's up to us by selling the need of the Red Cross dramatically to our audiences to get them back to the understanding that there is just as much need for the Red Cross today as there was in the days when we all kept our fingers crossed and prayed."

Heywood Amusement Co.
New Richmond, Wisc.

Our entire organization has been organized in full force. The war may be over for us but for many, unfortunately, the memory lingers on. We greatly realize that the need for Red Cross assistance and help is greater now than during the years just past. With this thought in mind we are out to make this Red Cross the greatest financial success of any drive we have participated in the past. We appreciate the immensity and importance of this project, but we are sure that we will all acquit ourselves commendably and do a great job.

Ben Marcus, General Manager
S & M Theatres Co.

"I'm going to try to get a lobby display ready and my screen will play whatever good trailers the Drive will furnish. This is a big thing. Probably we're a bit tired of doing big things because we've been pushing pretty hard now for years behind different causes all of which were good.

"But as long as there is misery in the world—and today there is more than enough of it—the Red Cross is needed. And it's up to the smaller showman to get out there and do what he can."

Harry K. Hecht

"The war is over but human suffering is not. Never, we believe, has there been a greater need for the helping hand than now.

"For this reason Manta and Rose circuit is going into this Red Cross drive with everything that it has. Our employes are feeling the same way

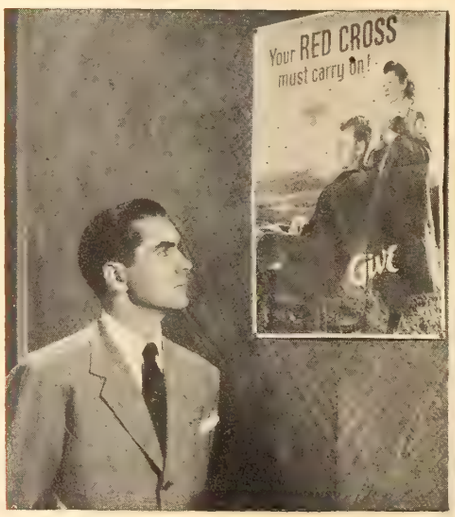
Committee Heads Confident Industry Will Match Great Wartime Accomplishments

In a determined effort to exceed quotas and previous years collections, the showmen of the nation are rallying behind the Motion Pictures Industry's Red Cross Week drive, March 20 to 26, inspired by the great need for the continuance of the Red Cross work both here and abroad. Exhibitors from all over the country have made extensive plans for record-breaking campaigns, and large numbers of pledges have already come into headquarters from the field.



Reports pouring in to William J. Kupper, National Distribution Chairman, from Branch Area Distribution chairmen, indicate the strong support that exhibitors are giving to the drive, many having telephoned or telegraphed their desire to cooperate without waiting to receive their pledges through the mail. Many circuits, large and small, give assurance that theatre managers and employes will bend every effort to go "over the top" this year.

Among the many aids being distributed are: a trailer, packed with emotional appeal, to precede each collection period, prepared by Darryl F. Zanuck of 20thFox, starring Tyrone Power, and available free at all National Screen Service exchanges; March of Time's "The Job Ahead" depicting the Red Cross activities in aiding G.I. families, in overseas libraries, in overseas clubs, in veteran's hospitals, in veterans' aid and disaster relief, this film is available at local 20th Century-Fox exchanges; and a "selling kit" containing a 16-page, three-color press book, filled with publicity, exploitation and advertising tips, and general information about the drive, multi-colored 30x40, 40x60, and 8x12 sheets, and a page of 12 collection box stickers.

Showmen Outline 'Musts' for Red Cross Campaigns

A colorful lobby display can be built up around the 30 x 40 and 40 x 60 posters. Local appeal and added punch can be developed by display of decorations awarded to some local veteran. Remember, an impressive lobby display will produce the mood that builds up to readiness, willingness and eagerness to donate to the Red Cross when the collections are made.

Check over the very workmanlike press book that has been prepared for this Red Cross campaign—it will refresh your mind on ideas and stunts you have used successfully in the past and can use to good humanitarian advantage again this time with some added new twist for the 1946 Red Cross appeal.

Dramatize and glamorize the collections by "staging" your Red Cross trailer with some special showmanship. Close curtains and bring up house lights to full illumination to mark a pause between the preceding screen number and the appeal trailer. Put on red and blue footlights full before opening curtains and hold them until leader of trailer reaches the screen, then kill off the reds but hold the blues until titles appear, killing off the blues as first scene comes on.

Make collections after trailer with full house lights on. Have Red Cross volunteers or house staff, whichever makes collections, well trained to time their work as precisely as possible and make the collections run off smoothly.

Strong Field Setup to Aid Theatremen

Red Cross Blazes Over Broadway

Launching of the 1946 Red Cross Drive in New York was marked by the blazoning of the drive symbol and slogan on the giant "Wondersign" fronting the RKO Palace Theatre on Broadway. Viewing the display, illustrated above in two photos showing the change from symbol to campaign slogan, are Red Cross Workers Margaret Cribben, Aileen Ergenzanger, Elaine Kirschenbaum and Jennie Propos.

and while we appreciate that everyone has been giving until it hurts for years, we believe that the great majority of theatre folk and members of our audiences remember that we're so much better off than the rest of the world that it is up to us to help better that rest of the world."

Manta and Rose Circuit
Chicago, Ill.

"We've never entirely approved of passing the hat in the theatre, but we think the public will cooperate in this and we therefore plan to make collections a practice throughout the Red Cross Week Drive. We recognize the fact that the theatre has a community function and it's part of our community function to maintain charities and social services.

"The chief difficulty in the New Orleans at the moment is that the public has been hit pretty hard for contributions and that the drive will come after Carnival where a lot of money is going to be spent. That's a regretable but undeniable fact.

"We will use if possible trailer time to try to get the public in the mood and a well produced and presented short causes them to reach down in their pockets. We have the experience of the past to demonstrate that. Where lobby space is ample, we will use either Red Cross posters or other display material to get the idea over that those who can must help those who can't help themselves."

Mrs. Henry Lazarus
Henry Lazarus Theatres, Inc.
New Orleans, La.

"We've signed up to work with the theatrical end of the Red Cross drive again this year because we're convinced that the Red Cross is not only a vital world need, but that it is good business for us to be in community activities and to emphasize the fact that our theatre is a community center.

"It may be a bit difficult to keep quotas up right now since the public has been on the giving end for quite some time, but we think it can be done with the aid of lobby displays, trailers and general good will."

Morris Jacobson

Bridgeport, Conn.

AFL Wins Round in Tug-O'-War

First showdown in Hollywood's tangled labor jurisdictional situation this week came from the coast as the AFL Screen Extras' Guild won the right to bargain for screen extras over the Conference of Studio Union's Screen Players' Union in a National Labor Relations Board Election. The vote was 1,227 for SEG to 821 for SPU. SEG had the backing of the AFL IATSE unions and the 4A'S.

Next bargaining agent question which may require a NLRB election may be in the office workers where the employers claim a union seeking to represent the employes no longer represents the majority.

41 Unions in Labor Organizations Under Contract to Film Studios

Forty-one unions—representing crafts and skills that range from the cook who feeds the inner man to the musician whose melodies heighten dramatic scenes are employed in the complicated business of movie-making, a list of unions having contracts with Hollywood studios reveals. The list does not cover similar unions which may claim jurisdiction of certain fields but which are not under contract. This diversity of interests and occupations hint at the reason why the Hollywood labor picture can appear so confused and bewildering to those outside the motion picture capital.

Of the 41 unions, seven are not affiliated with the AFL. They are:

Machinists, Cinema Lodge 1185 of the International Association of Machinists; Society of Motion Art Picture Directors; Dance Directors' Guild; Screen Directors' Guild; Script Clerks' Guild; Production Manager's Guild, Inc.; and the Screen Writers' Guild.

AFL affiliates are:

Local 946, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America; Locals 17, 284, 440, 468, 639, Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International of America; Local 399, International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Warehousemen and Helpers of America; Local 40, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Local 724, International Hod Carriers, Building and Common Laborers' Union; American Federation of Musicians; Local 755, Operative Plasterers and Cement Finishers, International Association of United States and Canada; Screen Cartoonists' Local 852 of Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America; Janitors' Local 278, Building Service Employes' International Union; Screen Office Employes' Guild Local 1391, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America; Local 644, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America; Local 193, Building Service Employes' International Union; Screen Publicists Local 1489, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America; Screen Story Analysts' Local 1488, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America; Screen Set Designers' Local 1421, Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America; Local 659, International Photographers of the Motion Picture Industries; Local 705, M. Wage Raises for Exchange Workers Hinges on Vote

Whether future contracts of the CIO United Office and Professional Workers' Union No. 1 of New York will have clauses raising wages from $5 to $10 will depend upon the referendum to be held by the members shortly, union headquarters announced.

The union, which is said to have contracts covering office workers in film exchanges and home offices, said its contracts with the majors expired in July. Recently at the national convention in Cleveland raises from $5 to $10 weekly, depending upon present earnings, had been approved by the national organization.

Taxes Show BO Increase

The federal government's 20 per cent amusement taxes showed a substantial increase for the month of January, 1946, over the same month in 1946, figures released this week show.

Total admissions throughout the United States for 1946 were $33,741,349.70 as compared to $24,345,560.17 in 1945.

7 States Contribute to New York Theatre Code

Seven cities—Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, New Orleans, Kansas City, Mo., San Francisco and Los Angeles—will probably furnish information and experience to help shape New York's new theatre code which is now in the making, License Commissioner Ben Fielding told SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW this week.

Fielding did not anticipate the code would be ready for the next four or five months and said that it would not be adopted until every interested group—exhibitors, legitimate theatre operators, unions, etc.—had had the opportunity to study it and to confer with him upon it.

"After this project got under way," the Commissioner said, "it aroused great interest elsewhere. I have had letters from cities across the nation asking for the benefit of our experience. These cities are also sending us their codes and their experience which is being carefully studied, and which may help us shape our code.

"Every interested section (group) will be given the opportunity to study the proposed code and to confer with me. When we came into this job there were no rules and regulations. We are trying to formulate those now. And we shall not adopt the code until all elements in the industry have had full opportunity to study and to make suggestions."

Conn. Exhibitors Must Flameproof Materials

Connecticut theatre owners have been ordered by State Police Commissioner Edward J. Hickey to flameproof all "drapes, curtains, acoustical materials, scenery, coverings, furniture" in all parts of the theatre used by patrons or employes.

Managers are to certify in writing to the Commissioner's office the date articles have been flameproofed. Non-flameproofed material will be removed from the theatre after a "reasonable time."

Clamp Down on Bank Night

Bank night and bingo games have been clamped down upon at Mansfield, Ohio, by order of Police Chief Meade K. Bates. Bates' order followed a raid on a city gambling house in which 67 persons were arrested. Three theatres, which have been sponsoring a joint bank night in that city, are affected.

Not to Fight Midnight Ban

Because its members are not solidly behind fighting the Toronto police commissioners' ban against midnight shows, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ontario has decided to take no further action against such prohibitory rulings in various municipalities.

Morals and Drama Mix

The following are quotations from Raymond Massey's address to the Motion Picture Council:

"Producers do not want to corrupt the minds of the country; they do not want to antagonize the thinking people of the country. . . . They have proved their good citizenship during the war. They will not let the public down with a dull religious picture but they will wish to make a good one.

"If any part of the money that has been spent on documentary shorts or for propaganda during the last 5 years could be spent on stories of the Bible in short form, what an influence it would have on the youth of the country.

"The Moral point of view is consistent with good drama."

Air Squawk on 'Bells' Terms in Newspaper Ad

Rebellious Cincinnati exhibitors seemed to be still on a rampage this week in the wake of their space-buying in the daily papers to tell the public why they refused to play RKO's "The Bells of St. Mary's."

The exhibitors, members of the Greater Cincinnati Independent Exhibitors' Association, claimed that the deal of 50 per cent to play the film from Saturday through Wednesday was unreasonable. A subsequent offer, said to be slightly lower in percentage and on different days, also apparently was rejected.

French Press to See Films Denied Public By Quota

Paramount's international division will trade screen, starting March fourth, a total of four features in six French cities. The purpose of the screenings, which will be for special audiences composed of trade and lay press, is to show the screen productions which are available but which may not be exhibited to the French public because licenses have not been issued by the French government. The screenings will take place in Paris, Marseille, Lyon, Bordeaux, Toulon and Lisle and the pictures to be shown are "No Time for Love," "Moon Over Burma," "Double Indemnity," "The Uninvited," "The Major and the Minor" and "And Now Tomorrow," none of which has been exhibited in France.

Gaumont-Kalee, Ltd., a Canadian affiliate of the British firm, has been incorporated in Toronto to handle a complete line of theatre equipment and supplies, President J. Earl Lawson, K. C., announced this week. Oscar Hanson will be general manager and E. K. Harris, engineering expert, will be Hanson's assistant. The new company will handle Canadian and United States supplies as well as British product.

RKO Theatre Operations in the New York Metropolitan area will continue as at present with Zone Managers C. B. McDonald and Russ Emde in charge of their respective divisions, General Manager Sol A. This territory as formerly under the direction of the late James M. Brennan.

Hits 'Pay Dirt' Books As Source for Movies

That the Protestant Motion Picture Council might quietly extend its activities to asking that producers cease making films from questionable books even though screen versions were written to conform to the motion picture code, appeared likely this week as Christian Herald Editor Dr. Daniel A. Poling lashed "pay dirt" publishers and praised the film industry for "self-discipline."

Dr. Poling and stage-screen actor Raymond Massey were the principal speakers before the 327 who attend the Protestant Motion Picture Council luncheon in the Hotel New Yorker where it was made plain that it would be the policy of the council to give aggressive box-office support to pictures of which it approved. This policy was considered superior to censorship, which Dr. Poling declared to be "basically un-American," but he added "there are times when it becomes the lesser of two evils."

"One question," Dr. Poling said, "we may... reasonably ask: 'How long will certain American publishers continue to prospect for "pay dirt" in the field of fiction. How long will these publishers make out of the motion picture industry their picture "sugar daddy.?"

Stories, the religious editor added, which violated decent principles of "home and society, that are a challenge to every principle of religion, have been whitewashed clean by the industry's code," but the original "filth" continues to sell in the published version.

May Request Ban by Studios

His remarks were taken to infer that the motion picture versions tended to increase book sales and that questionable books thereby profited and had a larger reading audience. Later he told THE SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW that it was likely that action would be taken to suggest to producers that such books not be filmed, even in purified versions.

"We who are gathered . . . today," Dr. Poling continued, "would be delighted I know to support a publisher's code even as today we united to strengthen the code of the motion picture industry."

At the beginning of his speech Dr. Poling said that the motion picture industry had set a worthy example by accepting "a plan of self discipline."

Massey said the theatre was closer to the church now than it had been at anytime since the Restoration drama had put the theatre in bad odor. He urged making pictures stressing greater moral values and the production of biblical shorts.

Freedman New Head Of Lichtman Chain

Harry Freedman this week succeeded the veteran A. E. Lichtman as president of the Lichtman theatre circuit as the company announced plans to expand southward into North Carolina and South Carolina.

Freedman, associated with Lichtman, who resigned, since the founding of the circuit, said no policy changes were contemplated. The new president announced negotiations to acquire the 926-seat Hill Theatre in Baltimore and sites for two new houses in Washington, D. C.

MGM's 'Anniversary 5'

MGM's next block, to be known as "MGM's Anniversary Five" and scheduled for release during March and April, will include "The Hoodlum Saint," "Bad Bascomb," "The Postman Always Rings Twice," "The Last Chance" and "Two Sisters From Boston."

It's Fine Now . . . But

Showmen in Cleveland find that the strikes which had cut into the earnings of thousands here have not affected box-office receipts. In fact, enforced idleness seems to have swollen grosses, since strikers with time on their hands and some money in their pockets patronize the theatres more frequently than they did. However if the situation continues for a long period, anticipated drops in attendances are expected.

Warns Against Too Much Realism in Screen Fare

Occasionally, and in skillfully administered doses, realism may be a strong screen asset but overdone it threatens to defeat the prime purpose of the motion picture, Steve Broidy, president of Monogram told THE SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW in Hollywood this week.

"We can't forget that the basic reason why people go to the theatre just as they go to sports, night clubs or listen to the radio, is to be entertained. The theatre has always been a form of escapism, and that is no criticism of the theatre, which has done a fine job ever since it came into being.

"But realism or realistic subjects may tend to rob the motion picture theatre of the very escapism it should offer. It stands to reason that if theatre audiences can't see any difference between the play unfolding on the screen and some of the unpleasant incidents of life they came to the theatre to forget, audiences soon would forget the motion picture theatre and turn to other forms of entertainment.

"I have a high respect for a realistic film well done. But I can't overlook the fact that romance, adventure, humor, heart interest, have been the standard appeal to audiences for too many years to have their efficacy disputed."

MPTOA Declares Support For Cancer Fund Drive

Support of the forthcoming industry cancer fund drive by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America was announced this week by President Ed Kuykendall who praised the initiative of Charles P. Skouras, Ted R. Gamble and Charles M. Reagan, "the committee of three who have assumed responsibility for the motion picture industry in . . . one of the most worthwhile efforts."

Simultaneously, the Industry's Cancer Drive Committee announced that RKO's Leon Bamberger has been appointed co-chairman of the distributor's division for the fund drive which takes place from April 21-28.

Blum Plea Refused

Efforts by Frank Blum to procure a preliminary injunction to keep William Goldman from taking possession of the 69th Street Theatre in Philadelphia failed when the court refused the plea. Blum claimed that he had negotiated a deal for the theatre with the owner and that Goldman had later persuaded the owner to cancel the Blum deal and sell to him.

Salesman-Exhibitor Cooperation Urged

Warner Bros., divisional sales meetings continued this week with the third of the series scheduled for March 9 at the home office in New York. Two more meetings are to be held in Memphis and San Francisco within the next 15 days.

Meetings last week were held in Chicago and Pittsburgh with Chicago opening the series. There Sales Vice-President Ben Kalmenson told the audience of field men and salesmen that since pre-war manpower had been restored to the majority of exchanges, district manager should strive for more intimate contact with exhibitors. Kalmenson said the sales and field forces should get out and help the exhibitor with his problems and to be especially ready to help with picture exploitation. He urged this in smaller communities where he said the exhibitor would most likely need help.

Kalmenson, Advertising and Publicity Vice-President Mort Blumenstock, Short Subject Sales Manager Norman H. Moray and Eastern Division Manager Jules Lapidus, with other home office personnel, were to attend Saturday's meeting in New York.

Censorship Likely to Spread, Warns Film Industry Observer

Political Moves, Tax Gravy Rather Than Moral Ideals Are Most Potent Factors

Belief that the next two years would see a spread of city and state censorship was expressed in New York this week by an informed industry observer.

The observer who requested that his name be withheld for business reasons, declared that this apparent censorship trend—noticed throughout several sections—would have been more decidedly apparent had more state legislatures been in session during 1946. He added that he thought that 1947 and 1948 might bring this question emphatically to the fore.

Morals or Money the Aim?

Ironically enough, he said, the morals of the motion pictures shown seem to have little to do with the trend. Causes which he says are building up a move to meddle with movies are:

Political. Censorship boards in state setups provide more jobs, something which any political organization desires. Censorship fees often prove lucrative—so lucrative in fact that they not only cover the costs of censor-board overhead but provide a surplus which is welcomed as a handsome revenue yield which the taxpayer does not feel.

Stymied By Great War Effort

Repression. Censor establishment moves stood little chance of success during the war because legislatures had the legitimate excuse that moves to win the war were of more importance and had priority. The censor-minded, baffled and repressed for several years now, are moving out to get what they couldn't get during the war period. He points out that this seems to be a companion move to the attempt to outlaw liquor which seems to be very strong in many sections at present.

To these forms of censorship must be added the possibilities of municipal censorship. While apparently little has been done along these lines to date, reports of bills aimed at censorship shows, or stopping Sunday shows have been increasingly heavy from various areas.

The Personal Slant

Diana Productions have filed a million dollar suit against fast-talking columnist Jimmie Fiddler for remarks made in an ABC broadcast about Walter Wanger's "Scarlet Street." A letter of protest was also filed with the FCC.

Loew's, Inc., stockholders extended the personal contracts of Louis B. Mayer and Sam Katz as well as naming William F. Rodgers to the board to fill the vacancy caused by the death of David Bernstein. Mayer has been holding down the same spot for the 22 years of the company's existence.

Allied National President Jack Kirsch wants theatre fund collection drives to be limited to one yearly and have all charities participate in the take.

Elimination of all clearance between the Floral Theatre, Floral Park and the Mineola Theatre, Mineola—both in Nassau County, L. I., N. Y.—has been affirmed by the arbitration appeals board.

Alexander Korda's London Film Productions which now owns part of British Lion is offering stockholders seven shillings a share in what apparently looks like a move to buy the entire outfit.

MPAA President Eric Johnston is one of the 10 members of the War Mobilization Board who signed a resolution endorsing trade pacts with England. A hitch in similar pacts in France is apparently what is holding American product out while the British go to town.

March 31 will end the life of the war-created Motion Picture Society of the Americas, according to word from the coast. Plans are mulling now to keep the outfit going with private funds and to expand it to world-wide activity.

Funeral services for John C. Flinn, 58, veteran motion pitcure industry executive, were held in New York this week.

Flinn, who died of complications following a major operation, entered the motion picture industry as publicity manager for the Jesse L. Hodkinson Corporation. He helped found and was vice-president-general manager of the Producers Distributing Corporation. When this firm merged with Pathe he remained as vice-president of the merged outfits.

In 1933 Flinn went to the NRA as executive secretary of the Code Authority for motion pictures, and later was an exploiteer for Paramount. He is survived by his widow, Courtney Luella Ames Flynn; a son, John C. Flinn, Jr., and a daughter, Mrs. Alfred Fisher.

Rank Widens U.S. Beachhead; Wins Favor of N. Y. Critics

Praised by Press But One Reviewer Says Product Is No Threat to Hollywood

Box-office backing may not be solidly lined up behind British pictures in America but New York's critics have been paying considerable attention to British product and are cordial to it, a poll conducted this week by Showmen's Trade Review reveals.

Several of the New York reviewing fraternity found that the British product had shown improvement, that it could have an appeal to American audiences, and that it could contest American product in the theatre. Leading dissenter was the Herald Tribune's Howard Barnes who said:

"They certainly haven't done anything to compete seriously with Hollywood."

Bosley Crowther of the New York Times finds recent British product does not compare favorably with "great films such as Early Hitchcock, "39 Steps," "The Lady Vanishes," or Korda's "Henry VIII." He liked "Col. Blump" and "Mr. Emmanuel" but said it did not approach the fine British pre-war product. Speaking of audience appeal, he said:

"A few of them might be quite likely to be popular in this country. 'The Seventh Veil' has a good chance and as an illustration I would say 'Johnny in the Clouds' hasn't." "Blithe Spirit" he found run-of-the-mill.

Sees 'Terrific Improvement'

Eileen Creelman of the Sun finds that British films have made a "terrific improvement" over what was shown 3 years ago and that British producers are making a sincere effort to find out what American audiences like and will try to give them that. She made it plain that she had previewed several which she thought were very sorry entertainment and said that English producers had acknowledged to her that American audiences seemed to have to strain to understand the dialogue.

"They go overboard when they make a picture they like," she said, "and they hate to cut it."

Her reactions were: "Col. Blimp"—"I liked it though it was too long." "Mr. Emmanuel" and "The Man in Gray"—"Just fair." "Blithe Spirit"—"I liked that very much." 'The Seventh Veil"—'I liked it partly."

Ethel Colby of the Daily Journal of Commerce said:

"They're far better technically. They have improved enormously in the past 5 years but they still have a long way to go."

She found "Blimp" "cleverly done, a beautiful picture," and "Emmanuel" "one of the most important pictures of the year."

She didn't see "The Man in Gray," or "The Seventh Veil" and she found "Blithe Spirit" poorer than the rest, but she liked "Johnny in the Clouds." ("They have a way with war pictures.")

Kate Cameron of the Daily News:

"Most of the pictures that have been brought over have been made during the war. I think that most of those I have seen have been good." She found:

"Col. Blimp" "splendid"; "Mr. Emanuel," "a fine picture"; 'Blithe Spirit" "so-so; their technicolor doesn't seem as good as Hollywood's"; "Johnny in the Clouds," "I liked that"; thought that exploitation might have made "The Man In Gray" (which she liked) a "bigger success."

Her assistant, Dorothy Masters, who reviewed "The Seventh Veil," liked it.

Lee Mortimer of the Daily Mirror said:

"We don't review many of them (British films); we have only been reviewing the main houses because of the paper shortage." He thought the films were about 50-50, didn't like "Blimp" or "Blithe Spirit"; liked "Johnny in the Clouds" and "The Man in Gray."

"Col. Blimp" was in its original version, "one of my 10 best of the year," Leo Mishkin of the Morning Telegraph found. Others were "Mr. Emmanuel," "very good"; "Blithe Spirit," "Johnny in the Clouds," "The Man in Gray," "fair"; "The Seventh Veil," "very good."

"By and large," he declared, "the British pictures we have been seeing since the end of the war are about the same as Hollywood's."

Unknown Stars a Handicap

"I imagine they are sending us the best," Irene Thirer of the New York Post said. "I think that the trouble right now is the American audience doesn't know the British stars. Just as soon as personalities get to be known, I don't see how they can help being successful in competition with American pictures. They definitively are good pictures."

She found "Blimp" "magnificent. I don't thing it is box-office for American audiences"; "Emanuel," "awfully good; ok for any audience..; "didn't particularly care for 'Blithe Spirit'—blushing technicolor not so good"; and said of "The Seventh Veil"—"I think it was very good and should have wide audience appeal."

John McManus of PM, speaking of audience appeal in British films said:

"They never had a chance for audience appeal. The foreign film has never had the same chance with the American public that the American product has. But if the question is, Can foreign films appeal to American audiences?, the answer is 'The Last Chance' is an example."

McManus was not too enthusiastic over current British product. "They've had," he said, "some awfully good films in the past—"Jeannie," "48 Hours," "Love on the Dole," 'Thunder Rock," "Seventh Veil," "Col. Blimp."

His judgment:

"'Blimp' was one of the finest films. 'Johnny in the Clouds,' pretty good, liked 'A Guy Named Joe.' 'Blithe Spirit,' unimpressive. 'The Man in Gray,' awful."

Rose Pelswick of the Journal American finds that present British product has improved considerably over product of former days but exempted the Hitchcock pictures from the statements.

"The Hitchcock pictures were good then and they're good now," she said. "In other words you could say Hitchcock pictures and British pictures. But today's average crop of British pictures is better than the British pictures in the past.

Asked about American audience reaction she said, "I don't know" and added that exploitation might bring in American audiences, citing the fact that British stars would have to be known to American audiences before they could atttract them to the box-office.

Of the currently released films she liked "Col. Blimp" "very much"; found "Emmanuel" "magnificent"; "Blithe Spirit" "very amusing," and "Johnny in the Clouds" "a good war picture."

St. Louis Stagehand Test Case Before Court Again

Halloway's Gem Theatre of St. Louis county—test case in the stagehand unions' efforts to put a man in some 110 theatres around St. Louis whether the houses play stage shows or not—was back in court this week, as the theatre's attorney sought to have a date fixed in an injunction suit which was thought to have been amicably settled.

The union and the theatre reportedly had come to an agreement whereby the theatre would not prosecute its attempt to get an injunction against picketing if the union stayed within the bounds of "peaceful picketing." The theatre now claims the union did not live up to that agreement.

Sherman Studios Acquired By Einfeld-Loew Company

Two veteran industrities plus $5,000,000 in capital resulted in formation of a new independent producing firm in Hollywood this week as Chrles Einfeld and David L. Loew organized Enterprise Production, Inc., and acquired the Sherman studios as production headquarters.

The Einfeld-Loew partnership calls for six pictures this year and as many next year. Actors, directors, stars, may serve as co-producers. Sherman studios are to be improved and enlarged for the new enterprise.

Harry S. Sherman this week joined Enterprise as an affiliate producer. His first picture will be "Ramrod," with Joel McCrea.

Picket for Price Cut

Fifty teen-agers picketed two Madison, Wis., theatres this week demanding a reduction in admission for their age group from 65 cents to 35 cents. The picketers, aged from 14 to 17, protested that they were considered juveniles under the city's 10 P.M. curfew ordinance but that when it came to pay-ign at the box-office, they came under the same heading as adults. Eight of the girls involved were taken to the police station and lectured.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

HARD WORK, BUT IT PAYS DIVIDENDS

By Jack Jackson

Here's food for thought by the big executives in the top spots of the industry's leading companies as well as for the work-a-day theatre owner or theatre manager who is manning the affairs of one theatre in one small town. For the leaders there's the important task of showing the way to a better, clearer interpretation of ways to attain the desired goal of the industry by all who are working therein. For the individual manager, there's the duty to self of making the most of his talents and energies.

So many lines are being written and so many words being spoken about the dire need for "Leadership" that the equally, if not more important, essential of "Followship" and that other indispensable member of the success trio, "Fellowship," are lost some place among the type-boxes and amplifying tubes.

That leadership is a prime requisite to the success of any Government, organization, business or public movement of whatever kind goes without saying. But, leadership without its companion aids of "Followship" and "Fellowship" is as futile as a porcine squeel in a sausage factory. History records no instance where leadership alone could be credited for the winning of wars or the advancement of the social or economic status of nations. But history does record no end of instances where leadership, ignoring its supporting companions, figured prominently and solely in the fall of great empires and the failure of deserving movements. The motion picture industry has never lacked for leadership. From Edison and Fox to Depinet and Skouras has been one long parade of men holding every attribute of leadership. Audacious vision and dauntless courage were hand-maidens to the men who pioneered with camera and those qualities are not found wanting in the present roster of top-rung industry personnel.

Noticeable Absence of 'Fellowship'

But—and remember I'm just voicing an interested observer's opinion which, like the late Will Roger's pithy observations, is based on what I read in the papers—there seems to be a very noticable absence of "fellowship" among the industry's "leadership." A situation of this kind quite naturally discourages "followship," with the result that the efforts of all are as impotent and meaningless as Don Quixote's contest with the wind mill. Combined and working in unison against any natural or man-made adversity, the leadership—followship—fellowship trio is a difficult combination to beat. But when discord and jealousy creep between leadership and fellowship that other chap, followship, skips out of reach and only a nugatory cacophony of wind-jamming results.

Any summarizing of the diverse avenues pursued by the various units that go to form the high command for solving industry problems will quickly reveal the wide gap between leadership and fellowship. The very sadly needed followship is practically an orphan forced to weave, willy nilly, in a crazy house of confusing and disconcerting entrances and exits. Remember that this group of followers—the little guys who work in theatres and in distributor and producer ranks—has had a 50 to 60 per cent turnover during the war years. The newcomers don't know which way to turn because they have had no fair amount of training about who's who and what's what. And the older members of the group seem to be mentally confused by their efforts to figure which of the many obvious routes offers the shortest distance to the desired goal of industry accomplishment.

If industry leadership will just make room for fellowship, that mightiest of the trio, followship, will be glad to join up and the three of them can give a convincing and conclusive "shellacking" to adverse legislation, censorship, taxation, and all the other elements that are now, and soon will be, harassing the business. And, they can do one heck of a swell job at garnering new business and elevating the industry to still higher peaks of public favor, too.

What is true of the top strata is true of every branch and unit of the motion picture industry. Each segment has its individual leaders who are followers of those occupying the higher rounds on the industry's ladder. The very best method of improving existing conditions in the overall control is to correct the imperfections in the various component parts and assemblies that go to make up the entire machine. And that's where you and your theatre, wherever its location and whatever its class, come in. In the big picture and on the big map you, the manager or man in charge of a theatre, are a follower. But in the local picture and on the community map you hold the sceptre of leadership and you are charged with the duty of fostering and developing the fellowship that will attract and cement followship to yourself and the business of your theatre.

You, and, you, and you—the men who actually handle theatres—are my gang, you're my kind, and my principal interest in drawing this word picture of existing conditions is to point the importance of the spot you fill and illustrate how you, my gang, can figure dominantly in correcting the situation.

Collectively you can—by giving better service to your patrons and taking better care of your theatres—help build the followship so necessary to the success of the industry. Collectively you can work hard to attract the extra—volume patronage that tilts the scales of revenue for or against those charged with responsibility in the overall picture. Collectively you carry the balance of power and consequently swing the big stick. You, through your collective efforts, can bring order out of the existing chaos.

The reward for hard work and intensive selling is an important place with financial plenty in a world-girdling industry of high public favor. The penalty for continued

Vacation Note

Theatre managers who have trained their assistants carefully and selected them on the basis of ingenuity, alertness, etc. may be prepared to take a comfortable vacation this year—perhaps the first since the war. On the other hand, the manager who believes that he is the only one in the theatre capable of performing the myriad details necessary to theatre operation will probably stay home.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

Small-Town Operation Test Of Manager's Showmanship

Operating a small theatre in a small town where strong competition is within easy driving distance, tests the showmanship of any manager. Things happen with exciting frequency that nearly drive the manager off balance at times, but his sense of accomplishment is increased in proportion to the difficulty he overcomes, adding tremendously to his sense of well-being, and perhaps, giving him an opportunity to take bows if he feels so inclined.

One such manager recounting some of his experiences not long ago told a story of the things he did to build up his theatre in his community and of some of the distracting things he had to overcome to keep running. He laughs about that part of it (he's a big theatre chain executive now), but it is perhaps the things he was able to do then that gained him the recognition by which he attained his present eminent position.

Exploited His Theatre

Briefly, he said that his small theatre was the only one in a town of about 3500 but that residents were in the habit of driving about five miles to the big city nearby to see newer films. So when he took over the theatre he was determined to exploit his theatre as well as his attractions and do it in such big-town fashion that his townspeople would make his theatre their main source of amusement—and he succeeded—in this manner:

He established the best, most courteous service possible, training his small staff in quiet, retiring niceties of conduct and bearing. He found that it probably would additionally carry out his idea of making his theatre a sort of town center by allowing the high school to hold morning assemblies in the theatre, using its stage, organ and other facilities (the school was just across the street), and induced women's clubs and societies to make slide anonuncements about their activities on the screen, free. He ran special bargain matinees at frequent intervals (which might be out of place today), sponsored free shows for kids once a year, near the Christmas holiday season, and collected groceries and clothing for the needy periodically.

With advertising in his small-town paper inexpensive, he more than doubled the space used by his predecessor, bringing his space up to sizes for the best mats prepared by distributors, altered slightly to add the local touch. He used heralds extensively, covering almost the entire town for each change of program. Publicity in the local newspaper was increased by this manager's intelligent selection of material which he knew would be of greatest interest in his town to the extent that the editor asked him to supply a daily motion picture news column.

Booked Stage Shows

At intervals he booked a stage show of sorts, just to supply diversion. The stage attractions were selected with care and, of course, had to come within the theatre's budgetary requirements, although the manager did not expect to make much money on them, depending on the occasional change to bolster his theatre, along the lines of his original thought, into the town's amusement center.

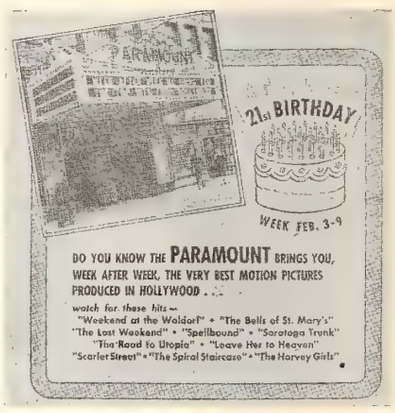
Some of the problems with which this manager has been confronted and which took quick thinking to obviate include prints failing to arrive, power going dead, pictures pulled at the last minute, etc., and other situations with which many other managers have been faced. Here's how this manager met some of his dilemmas:

One evening when the feature was half-way through and with a packed house—off went the lights, not only in his theatre but in the entire county! The house was pitch dark but he rigged up an emergency spotlight with the reserve batteries which he had thoughtfully supplied for this type of emergency. The batteries dimly lit the auditorium and relieved growing audience tension. A call to the power company brought forth the information that the trouble had been located and that service was to be resumed "within a short time"—nothing definite in the way of promises. The manager knew that the audience wouldn't sit there very long and, like every other manager in the world, he was determined not to give refunds until every alternative had been exhausted. He found a girl, an excellent pianist, who volunteered to play a few numbers. That worked for a while, but the audience began to get restless, so he climbed on the stage and announced a period of community singing. That continued for almost an hour but it couldn't keep up forever. During a pause in the singing he went into the wings, came out again, and taking a desperate chance announced that the power company would resume service in 15 minutes. When nearly 14 of those 15 minutes passed in more singing, he was convinced he would have to go for the refunds. Just as he was about to make the announcement to that effect—on came the lights!

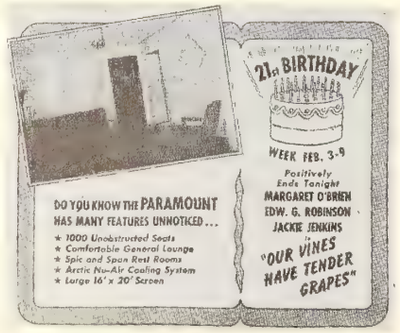
On another occasion he had put on an outstanding advertising and publicity campaign for a big picture. On the morning of the day it was to open he was informed by the exchange that because of some mix-up the film would not be available. He got in touch with a theatre in the nearby big town and asked them to send him the picture they had just played. Just before the picture was to start he announced from the stage to a capacity audience that because of transportation difficulties, etc., he would not be able to present the advertised picture, but that he had been able to secure a hit from the big city theatre. Anyone who did not wish to stay could get a refund. Not one left the theatre!

'Surprise Show'

Another time a film was canceled on short notice and the exchange could not state what would be available for showing on the announced date. Racking his brain, he came up with the idea of exploiting a "Surprise Show." He advertised it heavily through the regular media, guaranteeing it to be one of the best shows in years. The atmosphere of secrecy and mystery he threw around the new show evidently intrigued the customers and the result was excellent business.



Yes, it's nice to be in command of a deluxe, big-time theatre, but the small-town operation provides an enterprising, energetic manager with more of his share of problems—and more than his share of fun!



Birthday Stresses Service

Here are three samples of the ingenious institutional advertisements which were designed by Cliff L. Knoll, Paramount Theatre, Mitchell, S. D., for use in connection with a campaign playing up the 21st anniversary of the house.

Knoll has employed ideas which constantly have been stressed by showmen in urging managers to sell "all the features" their theatres offer. A fourth display, not illustrated, gave the spotlight to the projection booth at the Paramount. Copy read: "Do you know the Paramount has the finest projection booth money can buy. . ." and then listed the names of the main equipment units in the booth.

According to leading theatremen, the personality angle used in the display featuring the "15 trained persons" is one of the best morale builders that can be devised for putting the theatre staff on its toes. The display dealing with the type of pictures presented and mentioning the title of outstanding new attractions, drives home the institutional idea that the theatre is bringing its patrons the best in screen fare from Hollywood studios.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

Leadership Futile Without Fellowship, Jackson Warns

disinterest and lack of selling effort is existence eked from the scraps off the table of plenty and perhaps complete business oblivion. Work and more work is, and always has been, the secret of success.

William F. Rodgers, of Metro, at that company's recent sales and exploitation conferences, made a few remarks that should sound a warning to the lazy theatre managers and owners. He didn't call them "lazy," that is my personal classification of those who are content with whatever volume of business happens to drift up to the box-office and make no effort to swell attendance through sensible selling effort. In substance Rodgers warned that exhibitors of MGM pictures would be expected to take the greatest possible local advantage of the company's extensive national advertising effort and went on to emphasize that just being a customer in good standing on the books would not be sufficient reason for MGM to continue accounts where the audience potential of product was being dissipated. Salesmen of the company are to familiarize themselves with the complete scope of advertising coverage and the possible local supporting application of its many details. They will acquaint the exhibitor with the customer-attracting potential and assist as much as possible in planning local campaigns. Their effort will, of course, support and supplement that of the highly competent MGM field exploitation staff. The big news is that if the exhibitor wants to hold on to his MGM meal ticket he will have to vacate his place at the gin-rummy tables and start hustling for the added business MGM considers their product and advertising effort warrants.

Why Wait for Warning

Now MGM does a swell job of national advertising coverage. But so does RKO, Paramount, Warners, 20th Century-Fox, Universal, Columbia and the other distributors. Why wait until a similar warning is issued by other companies before putting on your spurs and galloping after the business that is certain to respond to well-conceived and enthusiastically executed selling effort?

Go over and have a talk with your grocer, butcher or candle-stick maker and see how much assistance the various concerns he buys from exert in an effort to school him in ways and means of selling more cabbage, beans, bacon or wax. Then pat yourself on the back at the first telephone pole you encounter because you are the local agent of a business where millions are being spent monthly in pre-selling the merchandise you offer your customers. Not only are radio, magazines, newspapers, window displays and valuable co-operative ads and articles provided but expensive brains are hired to prepare press books that outline numerous plans of local tie-up aspect that will help attract patronage.

Take a quick mental inventory of how much effort you have been exerting to bring this ready-made business up to your box-office and, if you find yourself wanting, make a firm resolution to start today to capitalize on every effort made by the producers and distributors to create a market in your town for their pictures. Start giving study to the press books and see if some of the ideas advanced can't be revamped slightly to fit your town and your customer pattern. Who can tell, perhaps, one or more of the ideas suggested will provide the nucleus of something entirely different in the way of selling effort that will not only bring added customers but elevate your personal business status in the community. The distributors supply the ideas, the ads, the accessories, the trailers and intensive and extensive national publicity and avertising assistance. It's up to you to do the work that condenses all the national effort into a spotlight that directs the folks, who thereby have been intrigued to the portals of your theatre.

Not for Your Town?

I know, you're going to tell me that the ideas supplied don't fit your town; that they're too expensive for your budget; that your customers are all "regulars" and that extra efforts "just don't mean anything in your situation."

Well, let me say that I have yet to encounter a press book where there was not one or more ideas—most of them be-whiskered and weary from any seasons of service, but nonetheless proved as practical and workable—that could not be altered or elaborated upon until a fitting ramification was suited to the particular situation. And, believe me, Mr. Showman, working them out and seeing them through will return big dividends. The trouble is that most theatremen expect the first effort to produce immense returns and, when this anticipation is not realized, immediately relapse into a state of suspended animation until old Mother Necessity forces an abrupt awakening. You have to keep the bones of your brain-box rattling incessantly in order to generate business-getting ideas. Once you let down the barriers of mental laziness and start the "think" motors you'll find it difficult indeed to keep your available energy—yours and that of your staff—apace with your mental output.

Just when your effort will start paying off is a matter of conjecture. The longer you have been mentally inactive and physically lazy in pursuing business the higher the hedge between you and potential customers has grown, necessitating a bigger job of trimming to get in down to "step-over" size.

Here's a little true story that explains the potential reward of activity better than any words I could put in type.

One Manager's Answer

One of my managers recently was burning the midnite wick trying to beat one of his theatre problems when a coterie of his fellows happened to pay him a visit. They engaged in playful ridicule of his overtime effort and his failure to take his allotted day off without getting extra remuneration. I'd like to paint his answer in mile-high letters where every theatre manager everywhere would be forced to read them at least a dozen times each day. It was:

"Fellows you're probably right. I know damn well that my paycheck next week, or the next and next, will carry no acknowledgement of this work I'm doing. But somewhere and sometime, either with this boss or some other boss, I'll be rewarded. It may not be in money but in some way I'm sure I'll be paid in full. And, aside from whatever actual money I may receive I'm having a lot of personal satisfaction proving to myself that I'm capable of doing this particular job."

He's right! I and every theatre executive everywhere wishes whole-heartedly that men like that were available in gross lots.

Accept the responsibility of leadership so far as your theatre, its attractions and your community is concerned. Be certain that at all times you manifest a sincere fellowship for those who support and aid you in reaching your desired goal. Put both your heart and your head in your every activity and you'll find yourself wearing the drum major's hat and twirling the jeweled baton—leading the numerous and mighty followship group to the very throne of success. It'll take a lot of thinking and a lot of working but the reward is well worth the effort.

Use Detergent

Wet surfaces and lobbies (marble, tile and terrazzo surfaces) accessible to theatre patrons should be cleaned with a detergent, instead of soap, to eliminate danger of patrons slipping.

THE BOX OFFICE SLANT

Journey Together

English Films Drama 80 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Good entertainment but a little out of date in theme.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Largely dependent upon the Edward G. Robinson draw. Where he draws well the film should do well. Suitable for double-bill programs.

Cast: Edward G. Robinson, Bessie Love, Richard Attenborough, Jack Watling, David Tomlinson, Sid Rider, Stuart Latham, Hugh Wakefield, Bromley Challenor, Z. Perzanowski and other personnel of the Royal Air Force, Royal Canadian Air Force and the United States Army. Credits: Story by Terence Rattigan. Directed and adapted by John Boulting. Production, John Howell. Photography, Harry Waxman with special effects by Ray Morse. RAF Symphony Orchestra conducted by Muir Mathieson.

Plot: Two young Britishers join the RAF and are desperate to become pilots. They pass preliminary training and go to the United States to continue. One washes out as a pilot and is assigned to study navigation in Canada. The two get together again when the successful pilot asks for his friend to navigate the bomber he now commands. Following a raid over Berlin the navigator brings them back over the channel where the ship crashes. Thanks to the navigator's keen accuracy they are sighted by an Air Sea Rescue plane and brought back to fly again. . .

Comment: This is one of the finer British films but is a little old in theme. It evidently was made by the RAF to indicate to the public just how important a navigator is, as part of an integrated crew, and that the pilot is not the entire show. As part of the country's recruiting endeavor it probably would have done a top job had the war continued. Offered to American audiences as straight entertainment without a message, it offers excellent acting and direction and a good, suspenseful and interesting story. Edward G. Robinson and Bessie Love appear in just a few sequences, with Robinson delivering his usual competent job of acting. This time he is an understanding, over-age civilian pilot-instructor of the young British fledglings and really "takes over" the screen in the short time he appears. Every other member of the large cast, excepting Miss Love, was an actual member of the RAF, RCAF or the United States Army and surprisingly do fine jobs of acting. Whether or not the film does well here will depend upon the drawing power of Robinson. One thing that should be noted: the press book gives considerable prominence to Robinson's name, as well it might, for box-office purposes. But exhibitors are warned that Robinson's part is not as important as the billing indicates. Neighborhood theatres, in particular, should be careful in considering the way the picture is sold to the public—misrepresentation is not often wise. The picture is suitable for any double-bill program.

Open City

Mayer-Burstyn Drama 100 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Powerful, deeply moving story of the Italian partisan movement against the Nazi occupation of Rome. Not for children under any circumstances. Good for any adult audience.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Carefully exploited, using the unanimously favorable quotes from the New York critics, this might do better than good. The fact that it is in Italian with English titles may mitigate against it, but word-of-mouth will offset this. It will stand up as a co-feature on any program.

Cast: Aldo Fabrizi, Anna Magnani, Marcello Pagliero and others. Credits: Story by Sergio Amidei. Scenario and dialog by S. Amidei and F. Fellini. Photographed by Ubaldo Arata. English titles by Pietro Di Donato and Herman G. Weinberg. Directed by Roberto Rosselini. Produced by Excelsa. A. Minerva Film. Released by Mayer-Burstyn Inc.

Plot: Manfredi, leader of the Italian underground movement, comes to Rome to obtain money for arms and ammunition to fight the Nazis. His identity revealed, he dare not appear on the streets, and is aided by Don Pietro, neighborhood priest, in his transaction with the partisans. Manfredi and the priest are captured, make a pact to keep silent under all conditions. Manfredi is tortured to death and the priest is executed by a Nazi firing squad.

Comment: The bare telling of this plot, which has several minor motivations entwined in its screen tale, must of necessity omit the savage realism inherent in the story itself. The director of this powerful story has succeeded in imbuing his players with an utterly convincing manner in which they convey their most realistic portrayals to audiences, and the fact that the picture is made in the Italian language with English titles detracts not an iota from audience understanding of the action. Don Pietro as the neighborhood priest, Anna Magnani as a widow engaged to marry one of the partisan leaders and Marcello Pagliero as the leader of the anti-fascist underground are excellent. The early parts of the film convincingly establish that a considerable part of the Italian population hate the Nazi occupiers of their land and that they definitely are trying to do something about it, including bombing gasoline and ammunition dumps, cutting Nazi communication lines and in general harassing their tormenters. Some of the scenes are gruesome and brutal in the extreme; the torture scenes, for instance, would have been handled by suggestion in American films, but the Italians evidently are more realistic—they let audiences have it right between the eyes. The execution of the priest is done with the priest straddled on a chair, facing the audience and between the audience and the firing squad. When he is shot in the back and the coup de grace is administered by a German officer, hearts almost stop beating. The picture is powerful, excellently produced, directed and acted and should be acceptable to any American adult audience. Children should not be admitted under any circumstance. Properly exploited this picture can do good business (witness—"The Last Chance").

SUITABLE FOR ADULTS ONLY

Journey Together — Just Before Dawn

Young Widow — Murder Is My Business

Spider Woman Strikes Back

Smooth as Silk

Universal Mystery 66 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Both mystery fans and regular patrons will enjoy this entertaining mystery.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Good second feature for any spot. Might top a week-end double bill with a Western.

Cast: Kent Taylor, Virginia Grey, Jane Adams, Milburn Stone, John Litel, Danny Morton, Charles Trowbridge, Theresa Harris, Harry Cheshire, Bert Moorhouse, Ralph Brooks. Credits: Directed by Charles Barton. Produced by Jack Bernhard and Howard Welsch. Screenplay by Dane Lussier and Kerry Shaw. Original story by Florence Ryerson and Colin Clements. Photography, Woody Bredell.

Plot: An ace attorney, gaining acquittal for a young playboy on trial for manslaughter, celebrates by giving an expensive bracelet to his actress fiancee. She drops him, however, to romance with the playboy because she wants the lead in a new stage production backed by his uncle. The attorney, furious, kills the uncle and then plans to kill his rival, but is trapped by the district attorney.

Comment: This will make a good supporting feature on any bill or might even top a week-end Western, for it is strong enough on suspense and mystery to hold the interest and keep the audience entertained. The plot, though formula stuff in many respects, has the neat switch of having the killer confess after having built up the evidence to point to another's guilt. And this will keep the mystery fans guessing until the finish. Kent Taylor is ably suited for the role of the well-known attorney: he gives a smooth, capable characterization. Virginia Grey is fine as his fiancee and conniving young actress, and in minor roles Milburn Stone, John Litel, Danny Morton and Jane Adams turn in satisfactory performances. Direction by Charles Barton sustains the suspense throughout and Jack Bernhard and Howard Welsch handled production.

Two Sisters From Boston

MGM Comedy With Music 112 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Thoroughly delightful entertainment with widespread mass appeal. Those Pasternak-Koster "touches" enhance its "different" entertainment values.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Although its "names" aren't tops, they're still well enough known to make the picture a formidable contender for better-than-average grosses in most theatres. Strong exploitation will also help.

Cast: Kathryn Grayson, June Allyson, Lauritz Melchior, Jimmy Durante, Peter Lawford, Ben Blue, Isobel Elsom, Harry Hayden, Thurston Hall, Nella Walker, Gino Corrado. Credits: Produced by Joe Pasternak. Directed by Henry Koster. Original screenplay by Myles Connolly. Additional dialog by James O'Hanlon and Harry Crane. Photographed by Robert Surtees. Art direction, Cedric Gibbons, Daniel B. Cathcart. Musical direction and adaptation of operatic sequences from Liszt and Mendelssohn by Charles Previn. Dance direction, Jack Donohue. Songs by Sammy Fain and Ralph Freed.

Plot: One of two very properly brought-up Salem sisters (Kathryn Grayson) breaks away from the family to try her wings at a singing career. Though her parents think she is in opera, in reality she is singing in a dive. Her family decide to visit her, and her sister (June Allyson), getting wise to the hoax, remains to watch over her. Result: Kathryn gets a chance for an operatic career, and succeeds, while June falls in love with a wealthy young man (Peter Lawford).

Comment: Pasternak-Koster pictures are in a class by themselves. Whether the story is off the beaten path or merely given a fresh twist, as in this instance, the result is thoroughly delightful entertainment with widespread mass appeal. Then, too, Pasternak-Koster have a happy knack of adapting classical music to the screen in a manner that wins it strong public favor. The foregoing attributes are readily apparent in "Two Sisters From Boston" which, despite the fact that it is somewhat too long, nevertheless is excellent screen fare for the entire family. Jimmy Durante shows up remarkably well in a role that calls not only for his customary brand of comedy but also for a characterization demanding thespian talent, with Jimmy delivering the goods in both departments. Kathryn Grayson, as lovely as ever, is pleasantly surprising in her rendition of a risque bowery saloon number, and acts and sings otherwise in a completely satisfactory manner. Charm and appeal are the attributes of June Allyson as the modest, naive other sister who eventually throws off her prim New England shackles to help Kathryn by taking her place at Jimmy's dive. Lauritz Melchior is in fine vocal fettle and performs well, while Ben Blue has his best comedy role to date as an amnesia-suffering butler who regains his memory only after "hitting the bottle." The operatic sequences, adapted from music by Liszt and Mendelssohn, are extremely agreeable to the ear, and there are other Pasternak-Koster "touches" that enhance the picture's "different" entertainment values. That "Two Sisters From Boston" will please all types of audiences, especially the masses, there is little doubt. And although its "names" are not exactly top box-office, they still are well enough known to make the picture a formidable contender for better-than-average grosses in most theatres. Strong exploitation will also help.

House of Horrors

Universal Horror 65 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Enough killings and suspense to satisfy the horror fans.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: First in a series of "Creeper" horror pictures, this is a good offering for the situations that use this product.

Cast: Bill Goodwin, Robert Lowery, Virginia Grey, Rondon Hatton, Martin Kosleck, Alan Napier, Howard Freeman, Joan Fulton. Credits: Directed by Jean Yarbrough. Screenplay by George Bricker. Original story by Dwight V. Babcock. Photography, Maury Gertsman. Produced by Ben Pivar.

Plot: A sculptor wins the loyalty of a murderer known as "The Creeper" when he fishes him out of the river and takes him home with him. One of the art critics has been publicly denouncing his work, so the sculptor gets the Creeper to kill him; he even has him kill everyone who gets in the sculptor's way as he tries to climb, in his madness, to fame. This goes on for sometime, with a young newspaper woman and her fiance, a commercial artist, involved, until the truth is uncovered.

Comment: This is the first in a series of horror pictures Universal had planned with Rondo Hatton in the lead as "The Creeper." But as things turned out, Hatton made only two before he passed away: this one and one called "The Brute Man," yet to come. The idea was a good one, as proven by this offering, for it is good horror fare, having all the ingredients the fans seek: lots of murder, suspense, and something extra special for this type of picture, a beautiful model named Joan Fulton who makes quite an impression in a minor role. Rondo Hatton is satisfactory in the leading role and Martin Kosleck does well as the mad sculptor. Robert Lowery and Virginia Grey do the romancing and Bill Goodwin makes a very capable police inspector.

Murder Is My Business

PRC Mystery 63 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Some badly written, spoken dialog prevent this from being a top-notch mystery. Just a fairly entertaining program picture.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Suitable for double-bill programs.

Cast: Hugh Beaumont, Cheryl Walker, Lyle Talbot Carol Andrews, George Meeker, Julie McMillan, David Reed, Pierre Watkin, Helene Heigh, Richard Keene, Parker Garvie, Virginia Christine, Ralph Dunn. Credits: Screenplay by Fred Myton based upon original characters and story by Brett Halliday. Produced by Sigmund Neufeld. Directed by Sam Newfield. Photography Jack Greenhalgh.

Plot: Private detective Hugh Beaumont is engaged to protect Julie McMillan when she receives threatening letters. He is propositioned by her husband, David Reed, to connive in a fake robbery on his home to collect insurance on the family jewelry. Julie McMillan is murdered and Beaumont is accused of connivance. He clears up the involved proceedings, however, and finds romance with his secretary, Cheryl Walker.

Comment: Although the bare skeins of the story had excellent possibilities for a top-notch murder mystery and the characters, with the exception of one or two, are drawn with accuracy, the director has permitted the players to read some impossibly trite dialog causing the film to lose most of its credibility. The comic police detective is almost burlesqued by Richard Keene and Julie McMillan acts as though she had rehearsed her lines once off the screen and was continuing the rehearsal. The picture, however, is not all bad. Hugh Beaumont, for instance, is about as ingratiating and capable a young actor as the screen has had in a long time. Cheryl Walker, too, is beautiful and does a good job of acting. Lyle Talbot again performs capably. The rest of the players do well enough with the badly written parts handed to them, with Carol Andrews looking beautiful in a seductive way. The film as a whole, however, fails to come up to expectations, largely because of poor writing and careless direction. But it will fill spots on most double bills.

Tangier

Universal Drama 75 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Mildly entertaining story of international intrigue, a demimondaine and murder.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Does not appear to be strong enough to stand alone, A more powerful co-feature will insure better returns than if played by itself.

Cast: Maria Montez, Preston Foster, Robert Paige, Louise Allbritton, Kent Taylor, Sabu, J. Edward Bromberg, Reginald Denny, Charles Judels, Francis McDonald, Erno Verenes, George Lynn, Rebel Randall, Dorothy Lawrence, James Linn, Billy Green, Phil Garris. Credits: Screenplay by M. M. Musselman and Monty F. Collins from an oriignal story by Alice D. G. Miller. Directed by George Waggner. Produced by Paul Malvern. Executive producer, Joe Gershenson. Photography, Woody Bredell. Special photography, D. S. Horsley.

Plot: Maria Montez, Louise Allbritton and Kent Taylor apparently are just professional dancers in Tangier and Robert Paige is a discreditd war correspondent searching for the big story that will get back his job. The dance team and Paige have unearthed an intrigue involving a huge diamond and a Nazi plot for two notorious Nazis to get away from justice, financed by sale of the diamond. An early conflict develops betwen Paige and Miss Montez, although each are searching for the same thing: Miss Montez to arrest the Nazis and Paige for his story. They join forces eventually, fall in love, achieve their ends and leave together for Madrid.

Comment: Screenplay writers Musselman and Collins have tossed in most of the time-worn mystery situations in putting together a laboriously contrived plot and have written dialog which sometimes is difficult for even such experienced actors as J. Edward Bromberg to deliver with any degree of reality. John R. Coincidence pops up too often, also, to lend any degree of credibility to the story, putting a couple of strikes on the players before they make their appearances. Miss Montez, Paige, Louise Allbritton, Kent Taylor, Bromberg and Sabu do the best possible with the poor material given them, delivering a passably entertaining film for not too-discriminating audiences. With the strength of its marquee names, the film should do fairly well, and booked with a stronger picture, should do better than fair.

Sweepstakes Winners Plug Warners' 'Three Strangers'

Three sweepstakes winners become embroiled in a series of dramatic events that make up the plot of Warners' "Three Strangers"—and what else would be the normal chain of thinking in the minds of Warners' home office publicity crew than to find real winners of past sweepstakes events and show them the picture?

Of course the next thing to do, they thought, was to invite newspaper reporters, cameramen, etc., to record the reactions of these people who had really won sums of money so that their deathless words could be repeated to the breathlessly awaiting newspaper readers of New York.

Anyhow, the boys found a flock of winners and showed them "Three Strangers"—and the New York City newspaper editors thought enough of the gag to assign reporters and photographers to ask them what they did with their winnings and how they had fared since winning the sums of money that had been dropped into their laps. Had their winnings changed their way of living? Did they think that the small investment they put into sweepstakes tickets gave them enough of an anticipatory lift to make the amount of their investment worth while? Or did they scrape the money together and live for the day the race was to be won in hopes that their aspect on life might be changed?

As a plain, unadulterated human interest story the newspapers ate the stunt up, without salt. The New York Post gave the story more than half a page in its front news section, with a streamer headline across the page reading, "What Happens to Sweepstakes Winners? Here It Is!" Pictures of six of the winners and a generous tieup with the film's showing at the Strand Theatre were included. Other New York newspapers also recognized the interest inherent in a story of this sort with generous space, even though they were well aware of the fact that it was a publicity stunt, pure and simple.

The stunt has enough human interest value to make it worth while for any theatre manager to look up winners in his own territory and arrange the same kind of publicity stunt with local newspapers.

Magazine Ad Campaign Launched on 'Forward'

A group of top publications in the magazine field have been selected by S. Barret McCormick, RKO Radio director of advertising and publicity, to carry the advertising message of "From This Day Forward" to an estimated readership of 58 million persons.

A brochure announcing the ads and insertion dates has been sent to the company's district managers, branch managers, salesmen and publicity men. The schedule includes Ladies Home Journal, McCall's, Cosmopolitan, Look, Collier's, Redbook, Liberty and a group of fan magazines.

Set Bogart Tieup With Raleigh Cigarets

The commercial tieup department of Warner Bros. has completed a deal with Raleigh Cigarets by which Humphrey Bogart will be featured in large ads in 160 leading newspapers throughout the country. Combined circulation of the newspapers exceeds 26 million. The tieup also includes breaks on the Red Skelton, Hildegarde and People Are Funny network radio programs.

Signs Point Way

A street display that theatremen dream of was achieved by Manager Ed Reed of the Strand, Providence, for the opening of Columbia's "One Way to Love." Utilizing the film's title, Reed had one-way street signs of the city cleverly sniped with "One Way to Love—Strand Theatre" signs. So well was the job done that the casual observer could scarcely tell the regular signs had been covered.

2-Way Promotional Set on 'Heartbeat'

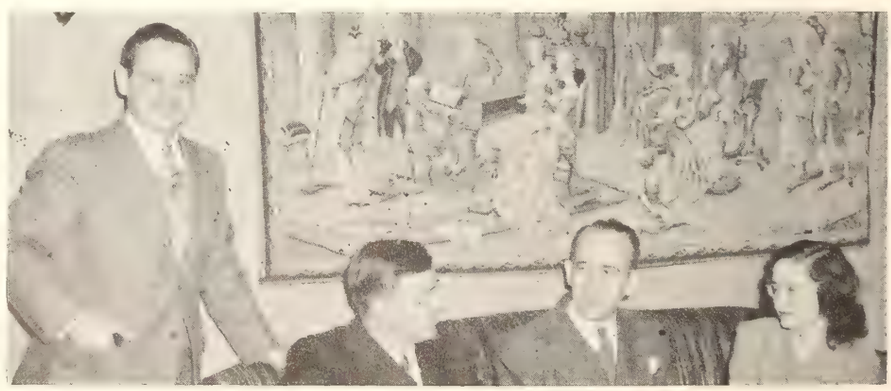
Arrangements were concluded last week between Jack O'Mara, sales promotion chief of ABC and KECA, and Milt Howe, publicity and advertising head of Robert and Raymond Hakim Productions, whereby Ginger Rogers will be the star name used by the American Broadcasting Company and KECA in their new two-way promotional campaign inaugurated by O'Mara last month. The tieup between station and star calls for a statement from the star, indorsing the station as the one to which she most frequently listens.

In return for the indorsement, KECA will plug the star in Sam Wood's "Heartbeat," produced by Robert and Raymond Hakim for RKO Radio in a two months' campaign, extending over April and May, which coincides with the film's release date. The promotion, with full credits to the picture, includes seven lighted boards, 300 "dashboards" on street cars and busses, newspaper and local magazine advertisements and displays on all of KECA's motor trucks. The same picture-star indorsement plugs will be used in KECA and ABC lobbies, on mail inserts, postage meter imprints and direct mail advertising booklets, thus completing the "visual" side of the tieup.

On the "listener" side, Station KECA will plug the star statement and picture on the air for two months. According to O'Mara, over 26 million "listener" and "looker" impressions for the station, star and movie will be covered by this program during the two-month campaign.

Marshall, Uncle Sam Tell Indiana About 'Maisie'

Hal Marshall, MGM field representative in the Indianapolis territory, and Uncle Sam, represented by the United States Army Recruiting Service, got together to plug their respective endeavors in a big way recently with Marshall promoting newspaper and radio breaks in increasing measure as "Up Goes Maisie" shows at the theatres covered by the publicist. The theatres get increased business, the army gets new recruits (including some of the theatre ushers), MGM is delighted and so is Marshall—everything is hotsy-totsy all around!



Starting the ball rolling, Marshall had Ann Sothern named "Honorary Recruiting Aide to the U. S. Army for Indiana," with an official order containing the designation. Then he arranged with the Recruiting Service to bring a helicopter to Indianapolis where the first local showing of the film took place at Loew's. Nearly the rest of the army moved in, too, with bands, brass hats, a recruiting booth in the theatre lobby, a parade and what-not.

Newspapers and radio stations vied with each other to feature news about the event, with the Indianapolis News, Times and Star publishing art and news stories before and after the event. The Star was particularly generous with a four-column splash on page one the morning after the stunt took place! All four radio stations covered the event in advance, with WIBC staging a remote control broadcast from the plane while persons on the ground talked via walkie-talkie to the pilot as he hovered over the city.

The same stunt, or variations of it, has been set for Muncie, Terre Haute, Lafayette, Bloomington, Washington and other Indiana situations with the same cooperation offered by the Army Recruiting Service.

Plan Ad Campaigns

While in Hollywood, S. Barret McCormick, RKO Radio director of advertising and publicity, is conferring with Walt Disney on the advertising campaign for Disney's next feature, "Make Mine Music," and with Samuel Goldwyn on plans for an all-out advertising and exploitation budget for his next Danny Kaye feature, "The Kid From Brooklyn."

CRITICS, THEATREMEN DISCUSS 'WEEKEND.' Following a special screening of Paramount's "The Lost Weekend" for members of the press, radio, clergy, doctors, and State and city officials, Edgar Goth (standing), director of advertising and publicity for Fabian-Wilmer & Vincent Theatres, and Gerry Wollaston, manager of the State Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., discuss the film's highlights with movie editors Dick McCrone and Gertrude Lawatsch of the Evening News and Telegraph, respectively.

Play Tunes Free

Music really filled the air in Harrisburg when Sam Gilman planted a juke box in front of Loew's Regent and invited passersby to play a tune for free. Catch was that the only songs in the juke box were from "Harvey Girls." Stunt could be used in other towns.

Windows Top Hulbert's 'Rhapsody' Campaign

Impressive style-fashion leading store window tieups, co-op advertising and plenty of local radio time, all master-minded by Manager Charles D. Hulbert for the Richmond, Va., showing of WB's "Rhapsody in Blue," gave the Gershwin musical a well-deserved eye-catching campaign, which had the patrons crowding the box-office of Fabian's Colonial Theatre.

Hulbert certainly took Richmond! Promoting three windows at a popular woman's department store, all of which received elegant fashions background with copy stating that the "beautiful creations were inspired by the mood of the film," the enterprising Virginian also persuaded four leading music stores to participate in window tieups, all of which gave the film a well rounded exploitation campaign.

A full-page-coop in the Richmond Times-Dispatch brought forth the merits of the film through the combined advertising of Gershwin records, Gershwin-inspired frocks and perfume.

A full one-half-hour program was devoted to Gershwin melodies and WRVA's Juke Box Swing show presented a similar program. Spot radio announcements were also employed by Hulbert.

A huge attractive lobby display, featured two weeks in advance of the film, was another highlight of the campaign.

Jolley's Boy Scout Show Wins Newspaper Publicity

As the climax to Boy Scout-Girl Guide Week, Manager Mel Jolley of the Marks Theatre, Oshawa, Ontario, invited the local Scouts and Cubs to a special morning show. Jolley, by the way, is secretary of the local Boy Scout's Association, so the special show brought him in contact with the boys.

A photographer was on hand to "snap" the crowd in front of the theatre, resulting in a four-column picture on the second page of the Times-Gazette. It all amounted to excellent publicity for Jolley's Marks Theatre. As the Chinese say (according to Mel): "A picture speaks a thousand words."

Cohn Pays Expenses of Prospective Newlywed

In connection with the opening of MGM's "The Sailor Takes a Wife" at Loew's Poli in Hartford, Conn., Manager Lou Cohen put on his own "gob takes a bride" campaign, offering to pay for the marriage license, wedding ring, wedding supper and bridal suite in a Hartford hotel for the first sailor or ex-sailor who announced imminent matrimonial plans.

Seaman 1st Class Kenneth G. Shifflett of Hartford, was the first to get under the wire with a card stating that unless something unforeseen happened he would lead his girl to the altar on March 2.

RED CROSS WEEK, March 20-26

Radio, Merchant 'Tracy' Tieups Get Results for Showman Breyer

Theatremen who aren't taking advantage of the opportunity to fully exploit RKO's "Dick Tracy" and thereby reap the benefit have only themselves to blame. Wherever the picture is backed by good, solid showmanship, the effect on the box-office is something akin to terrific.

Take, for example, the campaign staged by Lew Breyer, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Springfield, Mass. In so many words, Breyer's activities seem more or less simple, but as they were actually carried out, they constitute a campaign that reached far and wide in the showman's community. Briefly, Breyer had a radio tieup with station WSPR on the Dick Tracy program, promoted a window display in a local department store, promoted a cooperative newspaper ad which the store paid for, set a counter display in Woolworth's, sent letters to all school principals and mailed out 500 post cards to names selected from the city directory. That's all, but let's analyze this thing a little further.

The tieup with WSPR provided for announcements before and after the broadcast three days before the picture opened and on opening day. And yet those radio announcements proved the most potent aspect of Breyer's campaign. "They reached a vast audience," reports the Springfield theatreman. "Both children and adults told me they heard the Dick Tracy broadcast, and they came to see the picture." Thus were the campaign's best results produced.

Running the radio tieup a close second were Breyer's tieup with Stillman's, local department store, and the mailing of the post cards to patrons. Involved in the Stillman tieup was a large window display (see cut) highlighted by two sets of 11x14s and theatre credits in copy which tied in with the store's Dick Tracy Hats. In one of its ads, Stillman's devoted considerable space to the Dick Tracy Hat and the fact that six were to be given away free on the stage of the Broadway. In another store tieup, Woolworth's carried a counter display on Dick Tracy comic books.

The foregoing were the principal business-builders in Breyer's campaign. But not to be discounted as a factor in drawing attention to the showing were the letters mailed to principals. The virtues of Dick Tracy were emphasized in these missives, and passes were enclosed to be awarded to children who contributed the most to the various salvage drives or who purchased the most war savings stamps. Those whose conduct, in the principals' opinions, were high, also were rewarded.

The Dick Tracy Hats, plus Tracy novels, were given away at the theatre, with a goodly crowd on hand to witness the proceedings and the picture.

How much did all this cost Breyer? We don't actually know, but we'd guess: very little. And there isn't one of the stunts that couldn't be duplicated by a majority of theatremen in average communities. Breyer points out that there were as many adults as children in his audiences to witness "Dick Tracy," thus dispelling any ideas that the picture was exclusively for children.

Here is the Dick Tracy Hat display which Lew Breyer, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Springfield, Mass., promoted from Stillman's department store in connection with the showing of RKO's "Dick Tracy."

Newspaper Tiein Sells 'Tracy' in Cincinnati

To help bolster interest in RKO Radio's "Dick Tracy," the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, enlisted the cooperation of the Cincinnati Times-Star which runs the Dick Tracy comic strip. In addition to scene mats, press matter and a free display ad, a credit line was carried over the comic strip for a week in advance and during the engagement, calling attention to the picture. The theatre, in turn, ran a trailer and had a sign in the lobby calling attention to the comic feature.

Campaign was arranged with the assistance of Wally Heim, RKO field exploiteer under Terry Turner.

Strikes Serious Note in Exploiting 'Lost Weekend'

In exploiting Paramount's "The Lost Weekend" for the Harrisburg State Theatre, Manager Gerry Wollaston struck both the serious social angle of drinking as well as ballyhoo.

He invited persons interested in the problem of drink to a pre-showing screening by special letter and he took windows in the Penn Book Shop and Green's Books store, whom he got to cooperate with advertising on the book tiein. The State also increased local newspaper and radio budgets, plugging the favorable reports of New York critics, along with space for the National Seagram's ad on drinking.

Book Firm Ties in On 'Saratoga Trunk'

Grosset & Dunlap, Inc., book publishers, are distributing large posters, book slots and other promotional material to book dealers throughout the country as a cooperative effort with local exhibitors who will play Warners' "Saratoga Trunk."

Local representatives of the publishing house are urging dealers to arrange window and interior displays of the book from which the film was made to time with local exhibitions of the film in a mutual promotional effort.

London Showmen Exploit 'Last Chance' a la U. S.

That London exploiteers are achieving the same good box-office results as our own showmanship experts is borne out by a special STR dipatch from London outlining an ingenious campaign organized by Mervyn McPherson, publicity director of the MGM London office, for the English premiere of MGM-International's "The Last Chance." Here is the report:

"MGM's managing director, Sam Eckman, Jr., booked the film—like any important MGM release—to their 3500-seat Empire, the West End's largest cinema. It was a gamble, for despite the brilliance of the picture, the cast is unknown and much dialog is in foreign tongues. No continental film had been shown in any West End cinema larger than the Carlton—a news story in itself.

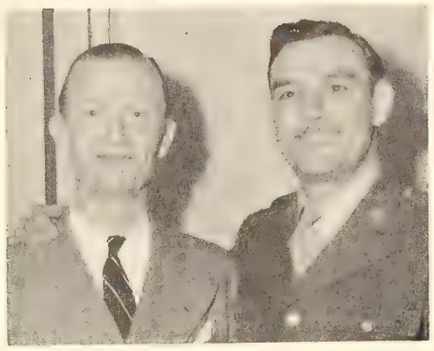
"Publicist McPherson, like his boss, was greatly struck by the film and started his campaign with a personal letter to the critics, mentioning that he had launched every important MGM release since 1935, and that he sincerely believed this was the most impressive of them all.

"Good play was then made of the film's success in New York and Paris, and the National Board of Review including it among the 10 Best of 1945. This whetted the critics' appetite and they were heralding the film before they saw it.

Holds Film Debate

"Continuing the unconventional, McPherson, instead of holding the usual projection room showing, hired the Palace Theatre and invited UNO delegates, statesmen, politicians, church dignitaries, stage and screen personalities, and leaders of all professions, as well as the critics. At the conclusion of the screening he invited them to join a debate, under the chairmanship of Mr. William Brown, MP, on the film and the problems it raised. Many well-known people, including His Excellency, The Swiss Minister, spoke glowingly of the film's brilliance and political significance, all of which was reported by the news agencies.

"The presentation was followed by a reception attended by many responsible for the film, including Director Leopold Lindtberg and the leading actors, John Hoy and E. G. Morrison, who virtually play themselves, since they both escaped from Italian POW Camps and are still serving soldiers in the ranks they portray in the film. Each provided further copy.



"So much interest was aroused in the film that Paul Holt, critic of the 3,000,000-circulation Daily Express, could not wait for the preview, but gained admittance to the trade show and beat the gun with a leading article.

"McPherson's campaign, which was backed with an increased advertising budget, resulted in magnificent advance press and radio notices and reviews and a large public for a film which needs well planned selling."

Warner Stars in Three Magazine Ad Tieups

Joan Leslie and Peggy Knudsen will appear in advertising sponsored by California Authentics, noted apparel firm, through a tieup made by Warner Bros.

Miss Leslie will be featured in a four-color layout crediting her current picture, "Cinderella Jones" and Miss Knudsen will appear in two ads, a single and a double-page layout plugging "Never Say Goodbye." The advertising will appear in national magazines with blowups of the ads to be sent to local stores for window display use.

SMART SHOWMANSHIP. Arthur Turner, manager of the Parsons Theatres in Parsons, Kansas, capitalized on an opportunity for publicity which fell in his lap recently when he discovered that Sgt. Ralph Byrd, starred in PRC's "Desperate Cargo," was stationed at a nearby camp. Since Byrd had finished the film just before going into the army and had not yet seen it Turner combined business with pleasure and invited the sergeant and four of his buddies as his guests for dinner at home and then took them to see the midnight showing of the picture. The Parsons Sun somehow (?) found out about it, sent a photographer and this is the photo that appeared on the front page the following evening. That's Showman Turner on the left.

Institutional Selling Important to Barnes

That smart showmanship is not necessarily confined to exploitation of pictures is evidenced by some institutional selling essayed recently by Charles W. Barnes, Jr., Granada Theatre, Kansas City, Kans.

On the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the Kansas City Kansan Barnes made up a smart newspaper ad in which he offered his theatre's congratulations to the newspaper and at the same time took a bow for being the first theatre in town to install the new Voice of the Theatre sound system. Other newspaper ads at about the same time gave as much space to the new sound system as to the attractions he was playing.

Along strictly exploitation lines Barnes came up with a beaut when he played "Yolanda and the Thief" by presenting a real live model in a store window. The model was pretty but when it became known around town that she was not only in the window but was taking a bubble bath there it became necessary to call out the local gendarmerie to maintain order! This, of course, was tied in directly to the bubble bath scene from the picture. Barnes played this up in his newspaper ads about the film, too.

Another selling job performed by Barnes was the tieup he made with Arthur Murray's exhibition dancers who appeared on the stage of the Granada at no cost to the theatre. This was played up in lobby displays, newspaper ads and other channels of publicity.

Sets Potent Tieup

Columbia has landed a potent tieup on "The Bandit of Sherwood Forest" in Indianapolis where the public schools system has agreed to play the "Robin Hood" album of music to 50,000 school children during class or assembly periods. Schools in other key cities are now in process of being lined up on the stunt, providing red-hot advance selling for the forthcoming film.

'Doll Face' Campaign Built Around Perry Como

The value of pre-campaign conferences between theatre managers and their cohorts is not always apparent, but in the case of Loew's Poli in Hartford it sure did pay off. Manager Lou Cohen called the meeting in connection with the opening of "Doll Face," and included three members of his staff, plus three of the Palace Theatre outfit. The value of the meeting rested in the fact that a directional line of attack was achieved from which the whole campaign could be delivered in a unified fashion.

If you will remember, Mr. Perry Como, the bobby-soxers' delight, is featured, along with Vivian Blaine. This was the line decided upon, for Como is admittedly flying high in the esteem of the younger set. Therefore, the whole exploitation scheme sprang from Como.

With such a definite one-way angle to work with the group were able to dream up a campaign that never let up on the theme for a minute and because of this concentration resulted in the public battering down the doors of the Poli (this "battering down the doors" is not meant literally; after all, Cohen does not want his doors battered down.)

It was decided to reach the public through music and a strong show of heralds, so distributed that they reached the girls and boys almost directly via high school entrances, music stores, drug stores and the usual hanging-out places of the jive set.

In the way of tieups the local Victor dealer played a big part, running cooperative ads in the two Hartford papers, plugging Como and "Doll Face." Six music store windows tied in the music from the picture with record displays, while dummy sheet music of the song hits were planted at the Five-and-Dime stores.

The local radio record jockey then chimed in with a contest giving guest tickets to the show to those who could name the crooners singing on a fifteen-minute program. One of these was Como, of course, and the film was tied in through the use of a "Doll Face" number.

The secondary theme of the campaign had to do with beauty shops and jewelry. Here Miss Blaine became a strong factor, with tieups in local beauty salons and Kay's jewelry store. Banners were also carried by six trucks of the local Koppelman trucking company.

'Make Mine Music' Drive Gets Under Way

RKO Radio has made arrangements with Dinah Shore, Nelson Eddy, the Andrews Sisters, Jerry Colonna, Andy Russel, the Kings Men and Benny Goodman's band to feature music from the forthcoming Walt Disney's "Make Mine Music," on their national radio hookups as the opening gun of a campaign which is planned to culminate with the film's New York premiere April 20th. National release is set for August 1.

Tieups have been arranged with leading manufacturers in addition to the musical promotions and other stunts in which emphasis is being placed on the possibility of localized selling conforming with theatre engagements.

Elaborate valentines, announcing the radio music tieups have been mailed to radio and news editors.

SHOWMAN SAM SAYS: Seems to me the exploitation departments are putting over more national tieups than ever before; and this, boys, is all right by me.

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

The Forest Commandos (Excellent)

WB (2002) Technicolor Special 20 mins.

In documentary form this exciting picturization of Canada's famous bush pilots in action and Ontario's never-ending fight against forest fires provides 20 thrilling minutes of entertainment for any type of audience. Highlighted by beautiful views of Canada's scenic splendor the film shows how incipient fires are spotted by observers in towers located throughout the territory on strategic heights and how, when a fire is spotted, the information is relayed to a central location where pumps and other fire-fighting equipment and plenty of manpower are loaded on planes piloted by the push-pilot fraternity and flown to the vicinity of the flames. Awesome views of the ravaging fire are shown from the air as is the technique used in fighting the flames. "The Forest Commandos" was filmed in Technicolor with the cooperation of the Forest Protection Service of the Department of Lands and Forests, Province of Ontario, Canada. It is thrilling entertainment.

Quarter Horses (Good)

RKO (64,307) Sportscope 8 mins.

The "quarter horse" of the southwest cattle country differs from his thoroughbred racing counterpart in that he has been bred for work on the range. His training fits him for the quick start and early stamina necessary for the short distance racing in which this type of horse is entered. The short shows various starts and races and shows the same race horses working on the range, "cutting out" cattle for branding or driving to market, etc. Sports fans and others will be interested in this little known (at least in the east) sport.

Report on Japan (Interesting)

RKO (63104) This Is America 19 mins.

With all Americans interested in the Japan of today and in the reaction of the Japanese people to their military defeat, the newest This Is America is timely and informative. It shows some of the customs of the people and is highlighted by a scene inside the Imperial Diet Palace, the Japanese Parliamentary building, at which the Emperor reads his rescript denying his divinity and explaining in simpler words that he is just another Japanese—not a God. Other scenes and the commentary point out that the life of Japan has been set on a straight road by General Douglas MacArthur. "Report on Japan" shows, too, the ruins of the great cities of that country by air bombings and the waste of Hiroshima made by the atomic bomb, and indicates the terrific struggle ahead for the Japanese before they can hope to again take their place in the councils of the nations of the earth. This is well worth presenting to any type of theatre audience. It will be appreciated.

BON VOYAGE. Lou Kalker (right), newly appointed British and European representative for PRC Pictures, says goodbye to President Harry H. Thomas in the latter's office before sailing to England, where he will make his headquarters.

Mermaid's Paradise (Good)

Columbia (7804) Sports Reel 9½ mins.

Some beautiful underwater photography, exciting diving and swimming sequences highlight this entertaining presentation of water sports, narrated by Bill Stern. While not too much of a variation of previously filmed subjects of similar nature Stern's commentary gives it an extra touch of comedy at times.

Krakatoa (Amusing)

20th Century-Fox (6508)
Mighty Mouse Terrytoon 7 mins.

In a tropical paradise the inhabitants of Krakatoa enjoy life until a volcano on their island erupts, threatening all with extinction. Mighty Mouse is informed of the impending tragedy by seismograph and hastens to the rescue, transporting the inhabitants through the air with the greatest of ease to another island in the vicinity where he is treated with adulation by the now happy islanders—mostly female.

Talking Magpies (Good)

20th Century-Fox (6509) Terrytoon 7 mins.

A duel of wits between the farmer and a pair of magpies looking for living quarters results in the long-suffering farmer blowing his top and setting out with the assistance of the dog and a shot-gun determined to wipe out all magpies. The chase and battle lead across the landscape with the magpies finally settled in the farmer's own quarters and the farmer and dog on the wrong end of an automobile crash. In Technicolor.

Mrs. Showman Goes Studio Strolling

Dear Mr. Exhibitor's Wife:

Shooting today over at Warners, for the Ann Sheridan picture, "The Sentence," is a scene in which Ann and Kent Smith go to his mountain cabin for the day to relax and get acquainted. The script calls for "a cabin built on a hillside, with an eighty-foot driveway leading to the door and pine trees fifty feet high all around." And that's exactly what we find once we enter Stage 7. It's hard to realize that the set is man-made, for everything seems so real, including the fragrant small of sap from the trees.

Story is about a man who has been ruled by a mother all his life (including her choice of his wife) who, after being married a number of years, falls in love with a singer. He tries to rearrange his life so that they may find some happiness together, but is unsuccessful. Life metes out what it has in store for him in spite of his finagling.

We find them rehearsing the scene when we arrive, so we locate a good spot at one of the windows and settle down to watch what's going on.

On the inside, seated in front of the fireplace, we see Ann and Smith. She's wearing a grey wool suit with a turtle-neck sweater. Yoke of the jacket is natural-color grey with the rest in horizontal stripes of different shades of the material. With it she evidently uses a red bag, shoes and gloves, for we see the bag and gloves lying on one of the corner tables. Smith has on a suede jacket with brown trousers.

Director Vincent Sherman gives the command for "camera," etc., shortly after we get there, at which time we hear the following dialog exchanged between the two players. Smith says (as he stands up): "Yes, look at it. This cabin is the only idea I ever had that was mine, and it's all covered with cobwebs." And she replies: "There's nothing to tell about me. Nora Prentiss. Six songs a night and now and then a drink with the better customers."

It's a tense, dramatic scene which requires numerous rehearsals before it is recorded on film. Then the players are free until the next setup is ready. When we realize this, we dash over to Ann, whom we've been anxious to meet. And from her we learn that it was a powerful story like this one that she was seeking before she agreed to come back to work.

We also learn that the script was written by Ranald MacDougall, the man up for an Academy Award for the splendid work he did on the "Mildred Pierce" story.

With our best wishes for her future success, we leave Ann as she goes back to work and we go forth to our job.

Until next week. Ann Lewis

TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX Has Four Films Going; "Forever Amber" Set Back a Week—This studio continues to roll, with four pictures shooting and two big ones just about ready to go. The quartet includes "Margie," "Claudia and David," "Home Sweet Homicide" and "Deadline for Murder." "Forever Amber," originally set for last week, is now scheduled for a start on Monday. "The Razor's Edge," which Darryl F. Zanuck will personally produce from the Somerset Maugham novel, is another strong production to roll shortly.

Finished this week were "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim" and "Three Little Girls in Blue," both Technicolor musicals.

"Home Sweet Homicide," just started, is being produced by Louis D. Lighton and directed by Lloyd Bacon. "Deadline for Murder" is the second Sol. M. Wurtzel independently produced picture. He just finished "Rendezvous 24" for Fox release. "Rendezvous 24" is 20th's entry in the current atom-bomb sweepstakes.

"Forever Amber," to be produced by William Perlberg and directed by John Stahl, now includes the following in its cast: Peggy Cummins, Cornel Wilde, Vincent Price, Reginald Gardiner. Other additions to the player lineup will be revealed next week. Alan Mowbray is serving as a technical adviser.

UNIVERSAL Slightly Behind in Production, With Three Pictures Before the Cameras—With the completion of "Little Miss Big," formerly titled "Three Kids and a Queen," this studio has three pictures rolling, somewhat below usual production tempo. "Fandango" is now in its ninth week. Also rolling are "Lessons in Love" (14th day) and "Inside Job" (recently started).

Abbott and Costello may start their next picture this week, according to the studio. Tentative title is "The Ghost Steps Out."

UNITED ARTISTS Has Three Pictures in Production, But Space Situation Remains Unchanged—UA has a large roster of producers, but the space situation is a deterring factor to production because each must find a setup in which he can produce his film. At the present time, there are three producers with pictures rolling. These are Hunt Stromberg, who is moving into the closing weeks with "The Strange Woman"; Charles R. Rogers, who is nearing the home stretch with his "Angel on My Shoulder," and Benedict Bogeaus, who has been experiencing trouble on his "Mr. Ace and the Queen" due to the protracted illness of George Raft.

With other producers the situation is this: Sturges has finished Harold Lloyd's "The Sin of Harold Diddlebock" and is editing it; Selznick will take some time to edit and score "Duel in the Sun"; Andrew Stone hopes to start "The Bachelor's Daughters" in several weeks; Arnold Pressburger has completed "A Scandal in Paris" and has sent it to Guam for a special Navy world premiere next week.

PRC Has One Film Rolling, Plans to Make Several More This Month—"Crime in the Night," being produced by Sig Neufeld, is the only picture going at PRC. "Avalanche" was finished last week and is being edited.

Alexander-Stern have set Arthur St. Claire to do the script job for "Flaming Jungle." A Buster Crabbe western is also on the agenda for March.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER Has Five Pictures Going; "Woman of My Own" Set Back—MGM continues its production lineup currently before the cameras with "Fiesta," which is winding up; "Till the Clouds Roll By," which started in January and will probably go for some time yet; "You Were There" and "The Showoff," nearing its first month of shooting. "Tenth Avenue Angel" is starting, with Margaret O'Brien as the star.

The studio announced that "A Woman of My Own" would start last week, but production has been postponed. When it goes before the cameras, perhaps this week. Director George Cukor will film the greater part of the picture around Monterey, Calif. Robert Montgomery and Greer Garson co-star.

COLUMBIA Slightly Behind in Production; Tempo Scheduled to Pick Up Soon—Columbia has two pictures going. One is the film about Al Jolson's life, now called "The Jolson Story," and the other is the extra-budget feature, "Gallant Journey." "Power of Attorney" and "The Return of Rusty," set to roll last week, have been pushed back. Starting dates now call for "Power of Attorney" to roll on Monday and "Rusty" to start on Friday. Ted Donaldson plays the lead.

"Gallant Journey," starring Glenn Ford and Janet Blair, is being filmed on location in Simi Valley. More than half of the film is scheduled for out-of-doors shooting.

"The Jolson Story," now in its 113th day before the cameras, ought to be finished shortly.

"The Coffin," an I Love a Mystery series production, has been set back to March 25. The same date is also reserved for the start of "Down to Eearth," which has been in rehearsal.

Ann Miller is rehearsing routines for "Rendezvous in Rio," set to roll next month.

IT WAS LIKE THIS. Mervyn LeRoy takes time out during his production, "Without Reservations," to tell Claudette Colbert, John Wayne and Don DeFore a story. Presented by Jesse L. Lasky, "Without Reservations" (formerly titled "Thanks, God, I'll Take It From Here"), will be released through RKO Radio.

'Apple Tree' Added to Lasky Production Plans

Lining up their 1946-47 production program, Jesse L. Lasky and Walter McEwen have purchased "The Apple Tree," long short story by the late John Galsworthy, noted British playwright and novelist.

"The Apple Tree" will be the third property acquired for future production by Jesse L. Lasky Productions. Now being completed is the Mervyn LeRoy production, "Without Reservations," which will be followed by "Intermission," from the play by Vincent Lawrence, who is doing the screenplay. "Caruso Sings Tonight," biography of the singer by his wife, Dorothy Caruso, will follow "Apple Tree" on the production schedule.

Rogers' Ranch Project

Roy Rogers, Republic's King of the Cowboys, has announced the completion of negotiations for the purchase of 560 acres of ranchland near Las Vegas, Nev., for the construction of an elaborate Roy Rogers residential guest ranch project at an estimated cost of $1,125,000.

Feminine Lead

Maureen O'Hara will have the feminine lead in 20th-Fox's "The Home Stretch," which Sally Benson will adapt. The same studio has named Helen Walker for the feminine lead of Craig Rice's "Home Sweet Homicide," now before the camera.

Rains in 'Deception'

Claude Rains has been assigned a leading role in Warners' "Deception," Bette Davis starrer which Henry Blanke will produce. Rains' last Warner picture was "Mr. Skeffington," released in 1944.

Wise to Direct Three

Robert Wise has been assigned to direct "Criminal Court," "Deadlier Than the Male" and another RKO Radio feature as yet untitled.

2 Options Exercised

Options on Jane Greer, actress, and Warren Duff, producer, have been exercised by RKO Radio.

CURRENT OBSERVATIONS

During the time we were away from the office last month, Sol Schwartz was promoted to the post of General Manager of RKO Theatres, a position of great importance and one which Sol richly deserved.

These promotions from within the ranks of an organization should be a real incentive for theatremen everywhere who aspire to climb the ladder of success and they certainly confound the pessimists who insist that to win promotion you have to marry the boss' daughter.

Our congratulations—even though a bit tardy—go to Sol and with them the hope that he does as good a job in the future as he has done in the past.

The habit of the picture companies to boast about the fantastic profits they make is one of the greatest dangers facing the industry.

It not only attracts the wrong kind of reaction from the lawmakers—federal, state and municipal—but the various unions connected with the industry, too, feel justified in making tremendous demands. And you can't blame them.

Even more important is the fact that it attracts too much attention from sources definitely antagonistic to our interests.

TAC might give this some careful thought and attention at their meeting in St. Louis.

Threat of a walkout of theatre managers of a national circuit again brings to the fore the pro and con arguments as to whether managerial work in movie theatres can be classed with other forms of work.

One of the union's demands is for a forty-eight hour week. Now we certainly never subscribed to the theory that a theatre manager should work fifteen hours a day, seven days a week. But on the other hand if a man is looking for a forty to forty-eight hour a week job he shouldn't enter showbusiness.

Theatre managers must make up their minds whether they want a routine job or what is required of a man who runs a theatre. The very nature and set-up of our business, as we view it, precludes anything resembling a small limited number of hours a week.

Long before there was even a whisper of unionizing managers this writer strongly advocated the six-day week and a schedule that cut down the old practices that resulted in some managers working seventy-odd hours a week even on a six-day basis.

The man who operates a motion picture theatre has a great many responsibilities and some of those responsibilities just cannot be relegated to an inexperienced assistant or some other of the staff. To do his job efficiently and effectively he has to supervise a great deal of the theatre's routine himself.

Such a job, if well done, requires his presence during the greater portion of the day with reasonable time off for his lunch and dinner. We don't see how it can be done in any eight-hour period unless a new concept is to come into being whereby all theatres employ two separate managers. This is economically unsound and would result in a condition that would be against the best interests of the men in those jobs.

There must be a reasonable and sensible solution to the problem. Especially in the larger houses that can afford a good assistant manager who can take over certain duties and responsibilities.

We hope someone finds the answer without resorting to unreasonable demands, strikes or lockouts.

Just about this time, prior to the beginning of any national drive, we have asked our readers whether they have completed their campaigns and are ready for the opening gun.

This is no exception. The annual Red Cross Drive starts on the 20th (with slight variations depending on policy-opening days) and so, once again, we ask if your arrangements are complete and your theatre ready to help make this first, post-war, Red Cross Drive the success your industry asks for.

The national committee has worked out every conceivable aid in the way of a campaign book, accessories, trailers, cooperative services for collections and every other kind of help a theatreman should have to round out a successful campaign.

How much you put these materials and aids to use is entirely in your hands and at your discretion. We only hope you are not going to let down this very worthy cause and your industry's pledge to back it up.

NATIONAL NEWSREEL

That Ought to Make It 100%

Successful court cases are more effective from the government's viewpoint in motion picture matters than such legislation as the Neely bill, Attorney General Tom Clark declared in Washington this week.

Clark was reported as saying that block booking legislation and the like would interfere with the Department of Justice's anti-trust cases which are now pending.

SEG Call for Closed Shop Jars Quiet on Labor Front

Despite the announced demand of Screen Extras Guild for a closed shop, the film industry's labor front presented a picture of generally amicable agreement late this week as contract settlements were made with front office workers, and several East coast laboratory worker and "back room" employe deals either closed or reported about to be closed.

Remaining unsettled and offering possibilities of trouble were:

An almost certain jurisdictional fight in Hollywood between the Screen Publicists' Guild and the Motion Picture Studio Publicists' Guild which was recently chartered by the IATSE.

Efforts of the Screen Extras' Guild, which recently won the right to bargain for the extras in a National Labor Relations Board election, to procure salary increases, closed shop and changes in working conditions. The Guild has engaged Attorney Lawrence W. Beilenson to negotiate for it.

The record of settlement included:

A national agreement reached in New York between all exchanges and the front office employes which sets a 40-hour week but allows for overtime which may be necessary for Saturday skeleton exchange operations. This was the only point of dispute in a contract which had otherwise been agreed upon several months ago.

Wage Boost for Exchange Help

The new contract, which expires Nov. 30 1947, calls for a 15 per cent salary increase, 10 per cent of which will be retroactive from Dec. 1, 1944 and the full 15 per cent retroactive from Dec. 1, 1945.

In St. Louis the exchange and back room employes of Local B1, IATSE-AFL affiliate, this week concluded an increased pay 40-hour week contract. (Similar agreements were reported reached in Chicago and were said to be ready for signing in Salt Lake City, Minneapolis and other exchange centers.)

The St. Louis agreement is said to provide for a 15 per cent retroactive pay increase from Dec. 1, 1944 to Nov. 30, 1945 when the newly negotiated contract expires.

In addition back room employes receive the following retroactive pay increases: 10 per cent for the period of Dec. 1, 1944 to Nov. 30, 1945; 5 per cent for the period of Dec. 1, 1943 to Nov. 30, 1944. The working week is fixed at 5 days, 40 hours. The agreement was negotiated by B1 Business Agent Betty Wendt with Harry D. Buckley, United Artists exchange operations head, and F. T. Murray, Universal exchange operations chief, representing all major distributors.

In New York, Local 702, Motion Picture Laboratory Technicians' Union (IATSE-AFL) and the film processors on the East coast reached an agreement which calls for a $5 weekly wage increase for all workers, a compromise on the original union demand for $10 weekly.

The increase effects over 1500 laboratory workers at Paramount News, Paramount's Astoria studios, DeLuxe, Consolidated, Ace, Du-Art, Film Service, Mecca, Mercury, Vitagraph, National Screen Service and Precision. Local 702 president John Francavilla represented the union.

MPSP in Membership Drive

What promises to be the source of disagreement in Hollywood is the jurisdictional claims of the Screen Publicists' Guild and the Motion Picture Studio Publicists, the latter of which recently received an IATSE charter and is now campaigning for members.

The Guild claims that it has been offered an AFL charter by AFL President William Green and that the action of the IATSE in chartering the rival organization is contrary to AFL policy. A wire of protest has been sent to Green. Meanwhile, both sides are apparently appealing to the National Labor Relations Board to hold an election to determine who shall represent the publicists.

New York's RKO Theatre managers strike was held in abeyance this week awaiting a meeting between the circuit, the Motion Picture Theatre Operating Managers and Assistant Managers' Guild and a representative of the New York state mediation board.

The managers had voted to strike if RKO continued to ignore an alleged NLRB directive shortening hours and increasing pay. But a union spokesman said the strike would be the last resort.

The managers claim the NLRB granted them a 48-hour week with salaries ranging from $85 to $140 a week for managers and from $40 to $75 a week for assistant managers.

Midwest Exhibitors Call Meeting to Discuss TAC

A special meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois, to determine whether or not the association will participate in the forthcoming Theatre Activities Committee organization meet, has been set for March 18 in St. Louis, according to MPTO President Fred Wehrenberg.

Curb on U. S.-Canada Theatre Building Looms

Restriction or possible curtailment of theatre construction appeared to be a certainty in the United States and a possibility in Canada this week as reports from both Washington and Toronto pointed out that housing shortages were acute and too much labor and material was going into commercial construction.

In Washington a stringent order, intended to force approximately two-thirds of the available building materials into residential construction, was reported drawn up in the offices of the Civilian Production Administration and the National Housing Agency. The bill would specifically require anyone wishing to construct an amusement edifice to show that it was needed by the community.

In Canada the situation seems largely in the talk stage, with the Canadian Legion complaining that there is too much commercial construction and too little veteran housing. Hearn Nichols, Toronto construction contractor and past President of the Legion, recently complained publicly that there was too much building of "places of pleasure such as theatres, clubs or churches."

His words accompanied reports of government action at Ottawa where a study of the situation is under way and a government ruling is expected.

85 Million Saw Trailer

According to headquarters of the National Committee an estimated 85 million people saw the American Brotherhood trailer produced by David O. Selznick and shown in 10,000 theatres of the U. S. during American Brotherhood Week last month.

Byron Price

(The Man on the Cover)

Vice-president of the Motion Picture Association of America in charge of the Hollywood office who this week was complimented by his chief, Eric A. Johnston, for his work on the Association's labor relations work and the improving picture developing studio-union relations in Hollywood. Price served with great distinction as head of the government's press censorship program during the war. He has had a long and successful career in the newspaper field, rising to the post of general news editor of the entire Associated Press system after rejoining AP in 1919 following his service in World War I as an infantry officer. His first connection with the Associated Press was in the Southern division at Atlanta in 1912. Later he was sent to New Orleans as chief correspondent of the AP bureau there and transferred in 1914 to the night copy desk of AP in Washington.

Hikes Prices, Spanked

The Vancouver State was fined $200 this week for a breach of Canadian price regulations alleged to have occurred when the house raised its admission five cents over the ceiling price. Theatre plays pictures and burlesque.

Get More Foreign Trade, Urges Eric Johnston

Pointing out that there is a vast market for American films in such practically untapped fields as Egypt, India, the Middle East and China, Motion Picture Association President Eric Johnston this week declared in Hollywood that the industry must aim toward increasing its foreign business to 50 per cent of the total industry revenue instead of the past 35 per cent.

Johnston said his office would soon appoint a labor contact man, and in this connection, praised the work done by Byron Price.

O'Dwyer Drops N. Y. City Amusement Tax

New York City's proposed 5 per cent tax on amusement admissions was quietly dropped from Mayor O'Dwyer's recommended tax sources this week as the mayor's tax program went to the legislature at Albany. Queried, the Mayor's office said of the tax: "It has been dropped."

The move was thought to be the result of the logical explanation offered both the mayor and Gov. Dewey by protesting exhibitors who pointed out the discriminatory nature of the tax.

Hartford Mayor Applies Needle to Censorship

Mayor Cornelius Moylan of Hartford this week gave the needle to censorship here by advising Police Chief Michael J. Godfrey he was opposed to "shows or movies of a salacious nature" and warning the chief not to relax his "vigilant attitude."

The mayor was apparently wroth mostly at burlesque which, it is reported, came to his attention through a religious paper, but he made it plain that movies, especially those unfit for juvenile consumption, should be dealt with.

Form Ass'n to Fight Higher Music Fees

Reports of a proposed increase in fees for the use of music in theatres and other public places of Ontario province, Canada, have sent the Motion Picture Theatre Owners into a huddle to organize plans to oppose such a raise. The raise, said to be contemplated by the Composers, Authors and Publishers Association of Toronto, resulted initially in the reorganization of the Musical Protective Society of Canada by the exhibitors, with Angus MacCunn of Famous Players Canadian Corporation as president.

An Altec regional conference for district and branch managers was held this week at the Park Central Hotel. Attending were President G. L. Carrington, Hollywood; District Managers Warren Conner, F. W. Cocklin, Henry Moog, D. A. Peterson, Long Hacking and Bert Sanford; Branch Managers M. C. Thomas (Cincinnati), J. D. Mather (Detroit), Nat Moyer (Atlanta), Frank B. Evans (Philadelphia), R. D. Fairbanks (Philadelphia), L. J. Patton and A. J. Rademacher (New York), and Sales Representative M. N. Wolf (New York).

Grosses Continue Uptrend Since Jan. 1, Survey Shows

Box office grosses which stagger even a showman's imagination, running consistently high from the boulevards of manufacturing cities to the main streets of agricultural Middletowns, continued to mount this week as the nation's theatres experienced another sensational upswing since the first of the year.

The steady trend towards larger grosses, based in part on the fact that current product reportedly is the strongest series of box-office fare to have been released simultaneously in years, is further backed by the fact that Mr. and Mrs. John Citizen are prosperous holders of savings bank books and that there is comparatively little they can spend their savings on.

Correspondents of Showmen's Trade Review, who surveyed the territory, report that business which was obviously good everywhere but in centers which lost military installations or war industries, seemed significantly good in farming sections.

Rural Sections Also Boom

One midwestern circuit has shown a 14 per cent business increase since Jan. 1. Another, serving agricultural regions in the lower midwest and upper south, has increased its business between 15 and 20 per cent in the same two and a half month period.

The heavy grosses show especially in the wave of holdovers which has struck the principal cities of the United States. This system, while profitable, is causing headaches to bookers who are trying to get product into the showcase theatres as near to national release dates as possible. They find the holdovers have piled up a backlog of unplayed product which will have to be sold elsewhere if it is to be shown at all.

Not all the trade is optimistic over the "dollar days" of the present, however.

One exhibitor remarked:

"Product may be part of the answer, but I think the right answer lies in the fact that the war is over and people now have money to spend with nothing much to spend it on. So the movies get it.

More Leisure, More Movies

"Also during the war a lot of them had to work overtime whether they wanted to or not. Now they don't have to and they're faced with the problem of what to do with their leisure. Our theatres get a lot of these leisure dollars.

"Yet, whenever I'm happy about this I remember that in the early days of the depression we had some of our best houses. Folks weren't working. So they went to the theatre—as long as they had the money."

Some showmen did not know whether their attendance would suffer when automobiles, radios and other presently unobtainable items reached the market again. The number who did was approximately balanced by those who believed increased production would mean increased revenue—and that there would still be enough money to buy the new car, the new radio, and take in a show.

They acknowledged though that auto and radio might take up some of the time now devoted to motion pictures and that a reduction in theatre attendance might be felt that way.

An industry worker, visiting New York this week claimed that most of the box-office prosperity was not based on larger theatre attendance but on higher prices.

He insisted that he spoke only for the west coast and the northwest. On the west coast he laid the tremendous business to high admissions on first runs. In the northwest he said he believed attendance actually had dropped but higher admissions more than offset the drop.

Let 'Em Eat Cake

Critics' wives, who usually are lucky if they get to see the show with hubby, found they weren't the forgotten women this week. Walter Kessler, assistant to Loew Division Manager Jack Cullen, sent each of them a three-layer cake topped by a bride and a sailor. And just so Cullen wouldn't let the critics think he was sailing under any false altruistic colors, candies around the cake spelled out the title of Loew's next attraction, "The Sailor Takes a Wife."

San Francisco Meeting To Close WB Regionals

The last of five Warner regional sales meetings will open next Saturday (23) in San Francisco, following this week's sessions in Memphis under Western and Southern Division Manager Roy Haines.

Bachman, Charlotte, and Luke Connor, New Orleans), and Southwestern District Manager Doak Roberts (with Branch Managers, Ed Williamson, Memphis; J. W. Loewe, Dallas, and J. B. Soakley, Oklahoma City). Field men attending were George Bannan, Tom Gorman, G. D. Woodard and Robert Bixler.

U. S. to Set Up Central Exchange for Its Films

A centralized information and distribution setup to handle all United States Government films will get under way in July by the Library of Congress, Librarian Luther H. Evans announced this week.

The new agency will distribute product—largely 16-mm.—which has served the purpose for which it was made and originally was handled by the agency of origin. The Library distribution will serve government agencies in Washington directly and will serve schools, educational institutions and the general public in the field through qualified book and film libraries, Evans added.

Hal Horne Forms Film-Radio-Tele Agency

Formation of a radio-television-motion picture liaison outfit to be known as Ted Lloyd, Inc., was announced this week by Publicist Hal Horne, who is president of the new corporation.

The firm is to represent motion picture producers, talent and literary agencies and will also produce for radio and television shows based on motion picture properties. Other officers are: Ted Lloyd, vice-president and general manager; Armand S. Deutsch, president of another Horne outfit, Story Productions, chairman of the board, and investment counselor Nathan W. Levin, secretary-treasurer.

24-Hour Club to Meet Truman

Twenty-four hours in Washington—to receive the thanks of President Truman for the work they did in raising Red Cross funds—will be the reward of 24 picked exhibitors and exchange salesmen on May 9 when the 24-Hour Club calls at the White House.

The meeting will mark the first time industry field men have received public presidential thanks. It will be attended also by National Industry Red Cross Chairman Spyros P. Skouras, who will read his report of collections to the president; Red Cross Chairman Basil O'Connor; National Industry Campaign Director Harold J. Fitzgerald, and National Distribution Chairman William J. Kupper, will be followed by another 24 hours in New York.

Exhibitors and exchange men will be selected from the high score collectors in each exchange area.

British Pictures Good But Need Ballyhoo, Critics Say

Country-Wide Poll Shows English Are Making Slow But Sure Popularity Gain

British films are getting increasingly favorable reviews throughout the country and seem to be making some slow audience headway, but as a whole they do not offer Hollywood serious competition, the newspaper critics of the nation say in a poll conducted this week by SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW.

The poll, which was conducted to complement that taken last week of the New York critics in the belief that New York and the other cities of the United States might not see eye to eye on the question, showed (surprisingly enough) that there is little difference of opinion between Gotham's reviewers and those of the East coast, Midwest, South and West.

Critics outside of New York reported that British product they had seen in the main received favorable reviews. The majority of them believed British product would benefit by better exploitation—a point which several of the New York fraternity had made.

Asked if the number of British pictures played in their theatres had increased, the nation's critics answered: West Coast, Midwest and East Coast—slightly; South and Southwest —no.

To the question of how the British product compared with Hollywood, the majority of them said "favorably," but qualified this with the statement that so few British pictures had been seen that there was no fair basis for comparison. About 20 per cent found English films below Hollywood quality or at the level of Hollywood B pictures. (Harold V. Cohen, Pittsburgh Post Gazette: "How can you judge when there are so few in comparison. After all so far we have been getting only the better English pictures.")

The question of American audience reaction to the British accent brought some surprising answers. Edwin Schallert of the Los Angeles Times thought his audiences had no trouble in understanding it, a point which was concurred in by Clay Bailey of the Dallas Daily Times-Herald. Prunella Hall of The Boston Post thought the Hub City audiences did have trouble with the accent. So did Mildred Martin of the Philadelphia Inquirer.

In reply to the query as to audience reaction to British product, the majority of the reviewers found the audiences did not favor it too highly. Fred E. Moon of The Atlanta Journal, who says British product is not wanted by circuit operations and consequently must seek the smaller houses, adds: "They don't click with the average audience. W. E. J. Martin of the Buffalo Courier-Express finds they are "generally below" in audience reaction. Dan Brennan of the Minneapolis Daily Times says English films get a good play, while J. Rachman of the Omaha World-Herald concludes: "Not so good now, but the pictures are gaining favor slowly." Harry Martin of the Memphis Commercial-Appeal says: "'Blithe Spirit' seems to have been well liked but with some reservations about the British accents and atmosphere."

J. Ward Marsh of the Cleveland Plain Dealer believes British films show a "higher IQ" than Hollywood.

Frank Harris, Veteran Pa. Exhibitor, Dies at 65

Funeral services for Frank J. Harris, veteran Pittsburgh showman and former president of the Harris Amusement Companies, were held Thursday from St. Phillip's Church in Crafton, Pa. Harris, who was 65, had been ill for several months. He was the brother of the late Senator John P. Harris, who organized the amusement company and who opened one of the first nickelodeons in the country and the uncle of John H. Harris, present head of the Harris Amusement Company and national president of the Variety Clubs of America. The deceased had been a state senator and was a director in the Frank J. Harris Real Estate Company.

Virginia Dale's new novel, "Honeyfogling Time," which 20th-Fox bought before publication, is reported to have met instant success when placed on the bookstands Wednesday by Harper Bros. The author, who was once movie editor of the Chicago Journal, takes for her title a word, "Honeyfogling," which was current in the 1880's to describe the love tactics of the "wolves" of those days.

RKO 'Sold' On Outside Product, Rathvon Says

RKO will continue to handle independent product made outside of its studios both on a straight distribution setup, as in the Goldwyn and Disney deals, or on productions wherein they have a financial interest, RKO President N. Peter Rathvon declared at a trade press conference in New York this week.

"A chief part of RKO policy," Rathvon said, "is to have outside product. There was a time when RKO was dependent upon outside product. Now we want to keep it as a matter of policy. Last year 35 per cent of our volume came from outside product. We admit it lends prestige to our product."

Rathvon said that RKO now had 18 to 20 pictures completed and two in production, and added that the company for the first time had a "substantial inventory." RKO, he added, is making "The Pearl" in Mexico and plans to expand its foreign production with about three more made in that country plus one made in Spain which RKO will handle. He expects also to have French product by the end of the current year. American-made releases may reach 40 by the end of December, 1946, he said.

Discussing television Rathvon said his company had been producing experimental shorts in that field.

In emphasizing the experimental nature of the production, he said:

"I think that market (television) will be ready before too long, so we experiment in it against that time."

Asked when he thought television would be ready, the RKO president added:

"It all hinges when the advertisers are willing to buy television time and pay something for it."

Group Selling Here To Stay, Depinet Says

RKO Executive Vice-President Ned Depinet this week declared that he did not believe block selling of a full year's product in advance ever again would be adopted by his company, and advocated continuance of the group plan now in force. Depinet also predicted "a new and greater era of prosperity with wider fields and greater opportunity for the industry." He said that first-run situations in the country had been increased by the switching of move-over and second-run houses into the first-run category.

Need Films Sans Quotas

Present British quotas on motion pictures will probably remain unchanged during the next two years, Sir Stafford Cripps, president of the Board of Trade declared in London this week. The Briton said that what was needed were British pictures which would not need a quota to support them.

Denies Russia Uses Sex To Win French Markets

Russian films are not leaning toward deft treatment of sex themes in hopes of battering their way against American product in the French market, Artkino President Nicholas Napoli declared this week in New York.

Told of a New York newspaper story to the effect that the Russians would turn to frothy sex stories because the Production Code would not permit Hollywood to follow in that field, Napoli said:

"There is no indication of that at all. The

New Light Ready for Film Projection In Year, W. U. Engineer Estimates

Western Union Telegraph Company's new light source (said to be six to ten times as efficient as a carbon arc) will be ready for theatre use in about a year, it was estimated this week by H. P. Corwith of the W. U. electronics engineering department. The new light source, demonstrated last week in Long Island City, N. Y., is based on a new principle, the lamp being an argon-filled glass bulb about the size of a small radio tube. In its simplest form it consists of two electrodes of tantalum metal, with a slight coating of zirconium metal on one electrode. The secret of the intensity of the light lies in the fact that the zirconium liquefies when an electric arc is created between the electrodes. The liquid zirconium is the light source.

Important features for application to motion picture projection are: the light needs no lamphouse in the conventional sense; since no carbons are used no carbon-feed mechanisms are necessary; there is no open arc, therefore no necessity for arc ventilation; it will work directly from an a.cfl or d.c. power line, thus eliminating need for rectifiers or generators (though in some communities voltage regulators may be required); saving in electricity will be realized by the greater efficiency of the new light, which for equivalent screen illumination will require only one-sixth to one-tenth the amount of power used in present-day arc projection.

The new lamps, which will operate in any position, are expected to have a useful life of from 1,000 to 5,000 hours.

For motion picture projection a modified type is contemplated, containing three electrodes plus a small tungsten filament which will start the arc. Without the filament, several hundred volts would have to be applied to ionize the ragon and get the arc started. The filament-type can be plugged directly into a 110-volt power line. Use of three instead of two electrodes will make a.c. operation practicable, the a.c. fluctuation in light intensity being reduced to only 12 per cent of the total illumination.

LONDON OBSERVATIONS

By Jock MacGregor

Perhaps it is the shortage of newsprint or just war fatigue, but generally speaking much advertising lacks sparkle these days. A notable exception is the work of Warners' Gayne Dexter. Example: Recently a "steeple jack" climbed "Nelson's Column," which dominates Central London to check whether it had been blasted by bombs and to clean it for the first time since the previous war. Cartooning the event, Gayne showed the workman whispering in Nelson's ear in a trade paper ad with the copy: 'And you can blame the new Gary Cooper—Ingrid Bergman film for those long queues in Leicester Square. They're cleaning up at the Warner Theatre, too!!! Warners' 'Saratoga Trunk'—a clean up everywhere!"

The trade show for "Lisbon Story" showed a decided reversal from the run of such shows recently and brought back memories of what the trade shows were before the war. I should not like to estimate how many invitations must have been sent out for the "Lisbon Story" show by Anglo-American, but the house was packed for this screen version of the successful West End musical play. Patricia Burke, who repeats her stage role in the film, is definite screen star material.

Prior to this show there was a growing monotony to the presentations for the trade, with the trade paper boys there in force but not many exhibitors. At first sight this may have suggested a growing slackness. However, the truth is that due to shortage of staff and pictures, few exhibitors were able to spare the time, with the result that distribution threatens to become much of a routine matter. Today product generally goes to the same circuits here. Warner, MGM, (Monogram and PRC) and Anglo-American goes to the ABC; Paramount product to the Odeon; Columbia to Gaumont British, and GFD (Universal and Rank product), Eagle Lion, RKO-Radio, 20th-Fox and UA are pretty well equally divided between GB and Odeon. British Lion-Republic goes to all circuits. Generally speaking the program which is booked for the London neighborhood houses is repeated in theatres throughout the whole country. There are changes, of course, in locations where the three circuits are not all in opposition to one another or where one circuit has more than one key house. In some cases where only two circuits operate, an independent exhibitor will take the program alloted to the third circuit. With the present shortage of product three "A" pictures and three to six "B" pictures are released each week. Often some of these are re-issues, which have done extremely well.

Recently we have observed a change in the tone of advertising for "Caesar and Cleopatra" in the press and on the billboard. A glamorous, Colorful Vivien Leigh now sprawls across the North side of Piccadilly Circus where originally there was a very stiff grey-blue poster dominated by the sphinx. The change is eye-compelling and brightens the display. With restrictions on electricity for advertising, these large posters are taking the place of neon signs outside the West End cinemas.

British films got a great boost when "The Daily Mail" staged a gala at the Leicester Square to commemorate both the cinemas' and their own half century. Opening with a program of newsreels prepared by Gaumont-British, Movietone and Pathe covering the great events of recent history, the second half took the form of film stars re-enacting scenes from famous productions on the stage. For my part the funniest moment came just before the broadcast, when British Movietone's commentator appeared on stage and requested the audience to applaud productions made by companies other than their own. The crack got a big laugh. The Mail is making an award for the two best performances and top picture of the war years as named by readers' vote.

A titan struggle is on between two films for title as the most profitable British picture to date. On my right, Sidney Box's "The Seventh Veil"; on my left, Maurice Ostrer's "The Wicked Lady." Both are taking in terrific money. The latter at the Davis, Croydon, beat the house record set up thirteen years ago by "Cavalcade."

Generally speaking attendance is dropping off and theatregoers are shopping for their entertainment.

Two American pictures which now are doing top business are "Wonder Man" and "The Road to Utopia."

Harry Buxton, whom we met when he was passing Through London on his way North from Bognor Regis where, he told me, he has bought the Pier and adjacent amusement center, is a firm believer in showmanship—ballyhoo and or anything that will bring those extra patrons to his shows. Many theatremen here had trouble with "It's In the Bag," titled in this country "Fifth Chair." However, Harry went all out on it and ran it five weeks. Recently he tried out Continental films at his smaller Manchester House, the Roxy, and did so well that he had to transfer them to a larger theatre.

The poor critics have been getting into trouble from a new quarter. This time it is Paris and the cause of the trouble is J. Arthur Rank's first French release, "Love Eternal" which was too Germanic for most of the boys. It was withdrawn from the recently opened Curzon after only three weeks. Strangely enough. Owner H. H. Wingate admitted that he made a mistake and that the patrons confirmed the critics' contention that it is not a good film.

Korda Names Helprin Aide

The former assistant to OWI Film Division Chief Robert Riskin will serve as liaison representative for Korda's British and European film activities and supervise press relations for affiliated production units. Korda is committed to a policy of 14 pictures for British Lion.

Ads Airing Exhibitor-Distributor Squabbles Scored by Veteran Editor

"Dirty line" advertising—advertising which airs intra-industry disputes and seeks to force the public into them—appears to be fundamentally unsound business practice, Robert W. Palmer, veteran editor of Printer's Ink, leading advertising trade journal, declared this week.

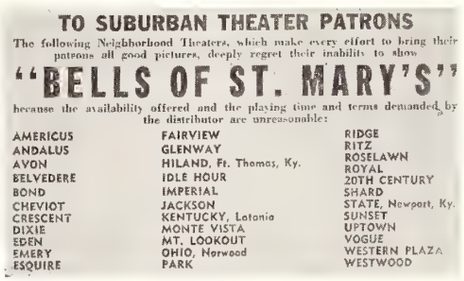
Palmer, who referred specifically to the recent ads which the Greater Cincinnati Independent Exhibitors' Association had placed in the daily newspapers of that city, denouncing terms for "The Bells of St. Mary's" as "unreasonable," made it plain that his publication did not deal greatly with retail advertising or motion pictures.

He seemed a bit surprised at the ad he was shown and inquired of SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW reporter:

"Is such advertising customary in your industry?"

The editor added he thought advertising of this type gained little results.

"If people," he added, "are sufficiently interested, they will go to see it ('Bells of St. Mary's') where it is shown."



"If anything were to be gained by an ad like this," he continued, "I would say there might be some justification for running it.

'Airing Dirty Linen'

"I don't think there is any good that can come out of airing your dirty linen before the public just because you have a fight. Particularly is this true if you do it through a medium which reaches an audience that can do very little or nothing toward a settlement of the dispute."

Palmer added that he thought the public is seldom interested in industry squabbles.

The ad in question, which was signed by 34 Cincinnati neighborhood theatres regretted their

According to reports in Cincinnati the trouble arose between exhibitors and RKO when the latter allegedly did not make the picture available to the 40-cent admission houses on the sevenh Sunday after its second week's showing in downtown houses. This "seventh Sunday" availability is said to be trade tradition in the Cincinnati territory.

RKO was then said to have demanded double playing time and 50 per cent against the customary 35 per cent. The 50 per cent demand later was said to have been modified but the availability, according to the exhibitors, had passed.

Nation Mulls Admission Rises as 3 Areas Act

Increases in theatre admission prices in three different exchange territories, which observers see as the prelude to rises or attempted rises in other sections, had taken effect this week as reports from Chicago, Omaha and Philadelphia showed circuits and individual houses putting slight mark-up on box-office admission schedules.

In Chicago, Balaban and Katz led off with a five-cent rise on their deluxe houses. The Trinz Circuit in the same area followed with another five-cent price hike, bringing their admissions to 55 cents, while Jones, Linick and Schaefer raised the LaSalle admission from 50 to 55 cents on weekday evenings and from 55 to 65 cents on Saturdays and Sundays.

In Omaha, all first-runs adopted an approximate 5-cent price increase. New admissions are now 50 and 65 cents; the former scale was 44 to 60 cents.

In Philadelphia, without much fanfare, several Stanley-Warner theatres increased their prices. The price hike in this case was not circuit wide but was reported to have been made only where increased expenses necessitated it.

Showmen in other areas have been complaining that while living costs and their expenses had increased materially in the past two years, theatre admissions had remained at a standstill. They seem to favor increases but hesitate to make them on the grounds that in some instances they do not believe the public, faced with other higher living costs, can stand the increased amusement tariff.

pictures they are making which I have seen concern important aspects of the war and reconstruction after the war, historical subjects, light comedies and musicals." The latter, he said, were popular in Russia because the public was seeking entertainment after the hard war years.

Napoli claimed that the fixed value of the ruble made it impossible to compare accurately the production costs between Hollywood and Russia.

"'Ivan the Terrible'," he said, "cost something between $800,000 and $900,000. Stars don't get $300,000 to $400,000 a picture. But they're well paid. Stars and directors are probably the highest paid people in Russia after scientists and technicians. However, in Russia the public do not ask 'Who is in the film?' Rather they ask 'What is the film about and who is playing?'"

Asked the salary for labor such as grips, the Artkino president said he did not know.

The company, he said, had no "special plans" for exploitation on its forthcoming product and was not planning to extend its distributing facilities at the moment.

Forthcoming releases including "The Great Turning Point," "The Twins," and "Hello, Moscow."

'Round the Clock

A 'round-the-clock operation policy went into effect at the St. Louis Newsreel this week as it booked the full lengh Russian documentary, "The Fall of Berlin." During the run, the house will operate 24 hours a day. If the policy clicks, it will become permanent.

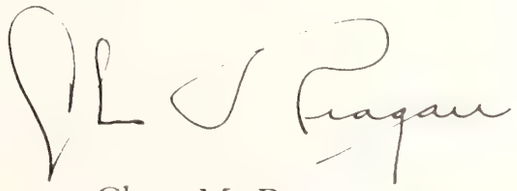
"Its New York engagement, now in its 15th week, has broken all house records.

"Its key city engagements to date have, in many cases, set new all-time highs for gross and playing time.

"Its performance in smaller situations has been just as remarkable.

"These facts demonstrate that 'The Lost Weekend' has already been established as one of the screen's great money-makers.



"Now the worldwide publicity attending the Academy Awards will give it further impetus.

"And, if we capitalize properly on these great tributes, I assure you there is almost no limit to what this picture can do at the box-office.

Smart Ad Averts Grief

The threat of a last-minute change in theatre bookings is the bane of every theatreman's existence. But the smart manager sometimes can turn near-disaster into something less than catastrophe.

One who did was Dave Idzal, manager of the Fox Theatre, Detroit, when it was decided to hold over "Leave Her to Heaven" instead of showing "Frontier Gal" as had been advertised. Idzal took large space in the Detroit dailies and in bold, startling type headed his ad: "Don't Wire Your Congressman! Don't Picket Us! Excuse Us Please." And then alongside of a matrix on "Heaven" culled from the press book, he printed in smaller type this explanation: "When we announced that 'Frontier Gal' would open today, record-breaking attendance had led us to believe that everyone had seen 'Leave Her to Heaven.' According to your many calls and requests, we are holding over for one positively final week." And then at the base of the ad in bold type he stated: "P.S. Next week for sure—'Frontier Gal'."

The individual, personalized approach in Idzal's copy theme gave the ad importance in the eyes of moviegoers and was well enough designed and laid out to attract eye attention on theatre pages. Nice going!

Paramount Publicity Changes Revealed

Realigning the magazine division of the publicity department in order to render more efficient service to its outlets, Al Wilkie, Paramount publicity manager, announced late last week the following shifts in duties of present personnel and the addition to his department of two new members.

Aileen Brenon, who has been in charge of all magazine activities, will remain in that post but will devote her entire time to the national non-theatrical publications.

Margaret Fewer Milton, secretary to Miss Brenon, has been promoted to control clerk on magazine art placement, and will work under the supervision of Rex Taylor, recently appointed publicity pictures coordinator. Marjorie Kane, formerly with Universal, has joined the department as fan magazine contact, succeeding Leo Brody, who resigned to open his own advertising service.

Edith Stone will handle the miscellaneous magazines, and Ruth Duthie has been appointed secretary to Miss Brenon.

The realignment is the first of several steps designed to increase the activities of the publicity department contemplated by Curtis Mitchell, national director of advertising and publicity.

Republic Participating In 'Cinderella Contest'

A full-page announcement in the April issue of Movie Songs magazine and other national advertising and publicity media, heralds Republic's participation in a "Cinderella Contest" being conducted by the new publication. The contest, which provides for a minimum screen engagement of two weeks for the winner, has as its judges Republic's producer-directors Joseph Kane and Alfred Santell, and star Vera Hruba Ralston.

National newspaper advertising appeared in the March 3rd issue of 52 leading newspapers, and is being supplemented by advertisements appearing in the Negro newspaper press, including the Afro-American and the Informer groups. The April issue of Song Hits magazine also carries an advertisement highlighting the contest and Republic. A detailed announcement was included in a recent broadcast of the Musical Grab Bag program, heard over station WOR under the sponsorship of Song Hits magazine.

Two-State Coverage For Flexer-Haberfield

Flexer-Haberfield Theatres, which operates two houses in Memphis and others in Amaory, New Albany and Sardis, Miss., have gone into a policy of circuit advertising in Memphis newspapers.

Using the Sunday Commercial Appeal, which blankets the section where they have operators, they list the ads of their Memphis Ritz and Peabody and carry the weekly schedule of their Mississippi houses. Since the Commercial Appeal is practically the daily newspaper for northern Mississippi they can get two-state coverage by this system.

Athens Paper Cooperates On Theatre Publicity

Fred Williams, of Schine's Athena Theatre, Athens, Ohio, has really been getting excellent cooperation from his local newspaper by getting many two-column scene mats with stories running the full length of the page. It is Williams' advice that other exhibitors with a little initiative and persuasion, could get the same splendid cooperation from their local papers.

Young and Old Targets of Pollock 'Bandit' Campaign

Manager Lester Pollock, Loew's Rochester Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., conducted an all-out campaign to sell Columbia's "Bandit of Sherwood Forest" to the public in general and to the youngsters in particular. Using tieups with local schools, newspapers, merchants, radio stations and a local Birthday Club provided plenty of outlets for exploitation.

Ten "Robin Hood" record albums were purchased and distributed through the local elementary and high schools to be played at assemblies and music classes. Members of Uncle Dan's Birthday Club, which runs in the Democrat and Chronicle, all 68,000 strong, between 6 and 12, were invited to attend the Saturday morning showing of the film and members with March birthdays were given free tickets. Uncle Dan was present at the performance and made a welcoming speech.

WSAY, local radio station, cooperated by playing the Robin Hood album for a half hour, and called special attention to the program by three spot announcements given two hours before actual broadcast. WHEC, another station, carried spot announcements about the Saturday morning Birthday Club show.

Many Varied Tieups

Merchant tieups were many and varied. Co-op ads and window displays on Anita Louise, with accompanying stills and enlargements, were done by one store to endorse make-up. A music store did a co-op ad and all music stores did window displays on the Robin Hood album, giving credits to the picture and the theatre. The Donnybrook hat was given a window display by one department store, using stills from the picture in the set-up. Another department store ran a co-op coiffure ad with an Anita Louise tie-in. The local sporting goods store did a full window display on archery equipment with cards giving credit to the film and the theatre.

Theatre lobby displays, two-week advance showing of trailers, national and local ads, and distribution of 5,000 book marks through local libraries, book stores and book departments, completed the excellent exploitation coverage.

ROUNDUP. Part of the crowd of 40,000 persons who visited the two-day Abilene Town Roundup at Loeser's Department Store, Brooklyn, set by United Artists to ballyhoo the opening of Jules Levey's "Abilene Town" at the Globe Theatre, New York. Exhibit covered entire basement of the huge store and included a midway, wheels of chance, display of original costumes worn by the stars and a corral containing stage coaches, buckboards, saddles and other Western paraphernalia. Professional models were part of the atmosphere.

Advertising Campaign of the Month

February 1946

THE SPIRAL STAIRCASE

(RKO Radio)

Compelling Copy, Provocative Mood in 'Staircase' Displays

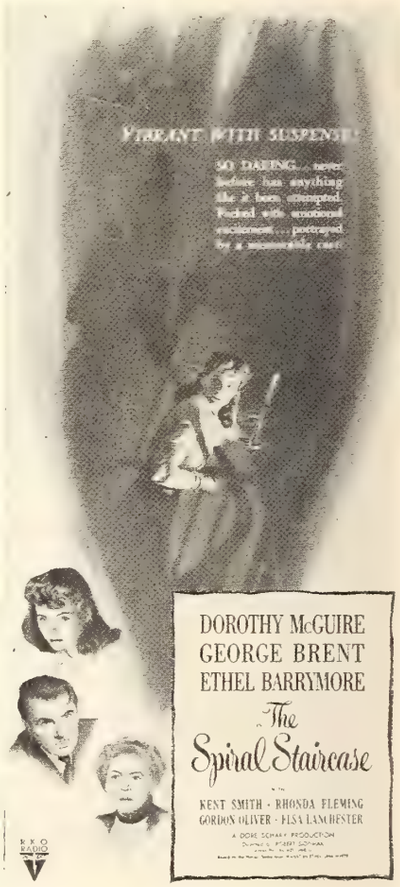
Motion picture advertising craftsmen strive mightily, and more often than not achieve at least in part the effect they try to convey; but not quite as often can they completely convey the feeling, the mood of absolute terror that is imparted to the casual newspaper reader as has been done with the series of displays created to advertise RKO Radio's "The Spiral Staircase." The campaign has been adjudged the most compelling, the most effective essayed in February 1946 and has been selected by a panel of showmen for SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW as the Advertising Campaign of the Month.

In the preliminary stages of the campaign's preparation, an analysis revealed that there were three important elements and one subordinate element to be sold: stark dama, high tension suspense, three front marquee names and a dash of mystery. And every one of the finished displays includes just those elements.

Upon cursory examination the advertisements appear simple enough, but closer analysis shows that three basic character photographs of Dorothy McGuire comprise the focal points and that art treatment and eerie lighting effects emphasize the terror imparted by the star. Allusion to the type of story is avoided except in elliptical references to daring, terror, etc., in the display copy.

Technical Treatment

Technically, the ads mostly follow established precepts using sweeps, "S" curves and other eye-guiding elements. But a new treatment is included that has seldom, if ever, been used in just this way. This treatment guides the eye with an art device in the shape of an inverted tear drop, large and globular at the top and diminishing at the base. The white space surrounding the art treatment of the ad, which is taller than it is wide, itself emphasizes the very uniqueness of the display, compelling reader attention.



One of the basic ads shows Miss McGuire on a winding staircase with light from the candle she carries throwing her huge shadow and that of the stairway on the wall. The lighting itself imparts a mood of eeriness and the startled, terror-stricken look on her face, played with the accomplished actress' characteristic restraint, tells a story in itself. The scripted headline reads, "The story that could not be told!", and the body copy immediately below states, "Hollywood called this story impossible to produce. Such mounting suspense . . . such daring emotional power . . . such difficult starring roles. Yet, here it is, in all its flawless fascination " It may be observed that the copy says very little —the reader knows only that the picture is one of suspense and emotional power, but most of all he is impressed with the fact that this is a different kind of picture, one that he will want to see. It is essentially a combination of teaser and conventional layout, thus constituting a new treatment in the annals of motion picture advertising.

Another basic ad shows a foreshortened photograph of Miss McGuire in the same pose as in the ad just described, but it eliminates the staircase backgound and substitutes a different kind of light and shadow treatment that brings the figure into startling relief. Against the dark background, in reverse type, a headline states, "The Impact . . . of Mysterious Forces!", with body copy reading, "Suspense that takes your breath . . . conflicts that freeze your emotions . . . in this, the fascinating story all Hollywood called 'impossible to make'." Here, again, the copy writers have followed the teaser-straight advertising theme, whetting reader appetites. The artists have added a small, imaginatively treated sketch of a deserted, grim and foreboding house in the far background, carrying the terror and suspense idea to an additional degree of effectiveness.

The third basic ad shows Miss McGuire in a different pose, one of fright, with the fingers of her hands and every portion of her expressive face and body imparting fear—and more fear. Almost the entire background of this ad is deep black with gray shades appearing only in the small section which comprises a background against which the distant, foreboding house again emphasizes the picture's theme of grimness, of terror. Copy head in this one is short, and states simply, "So Daring," and the body copy starts on another note, "Never before in Hollywood's brilliant record of great motion pictures has anything like it ever been attempted!", again bringing emphasis to the "different" aspect

Three of the basic ads from which the entire campaign on "The Spiral Staircase" stems are reproduced here in greatly reduced size. The series succeeds unusually well in imparting stark terror to the casual reader, emphasized by Miss McGuire's ability to convey, photographically, the film's mood. Note the sombre treatment throughout, highlighted by skillful art and layout.

Extensive Ballyhoo Given 'Trunk' Coast Premiere

In an extensive campaign through street, store window, billboard and radio ballyhoo, and the largest newspaper spread since space rationing ceased, the West Coast premiere of Warners' "Saratoga Trunk" took place at the Hollywood Downtown and Wiltern theatres, Los Angeles.

Banners were hung across the main thoroughfare for two blocks during the opening week of the picture. Many of the department stores, dress shops, jewelry shops, drug stores and cigar stores, used window displays, counter displays and credit cards, along with props, gowns, costumes, stills, enlargements and endorsements in an intensive merchant tieup.

Two hundred "Red Cars" carried "Saratoga Trunk" banners throughout the city and more than 70 teaser 24-sheets were put up throughout the city besides the regular posters and billboards.

Spot announcements, interviews, a half hour time signal teaser campaign, and a special screening for radio announcers and record program men, were all part of the radio campaign for the Gary Cooper-Ingrid Bergman starrer.

Real Script Prize in Movie Scripts Contest

George Bannan, Warner Bros. field representative, has arranged for the Houston Press and Radio Station KTHT to cooperate in getting the opinions of local film fans on "How I Would Write a Movie Script."

Paul Hochuli, Press columnist, who also has a radio program, will conduct the contest, which will run for six days on the air and also will get daily mention in his column as well as a promotional assist by two other radio programs.

First prize will be a script of a Warner film as written by the studio scenarists.

Bishop in Denver

William Bishop, MGM's Chicago exploitation representative, is in Denver to supervise the premiere of "Bad Bascomb" which will open in 21 houses in that territory, day and date.

PRESS AGENT'S DREAM. This is a small reproduction of a full page advertisement in the New York Times and the text apparently gives more to United Artists' "Caesar and Cleopatra" than it does to Bonwit Teller's wares. In case the type is too small to read here, it tells how they saw stills on the film and were inspired to create the gowns, jewelry, etc., in the Egyptian motif. Bonwit Teller, incidentally, also gave all of its Fifth Avenue windows to the film.

Calls Prove Effective

Considerable interest and comment was aroused by a novel stunt used in the promotion of "G.I. Honeymoon" in Miami, Fla., by Wometco's Rosetta Theatre Manager Edward C. May. The city's north side telephone subscribers were called by one of two girls using the following message, "Hello there, Mrs. Jones, this is Gale Storm, I'm getting married you know, so be sure to come and see me in 'G.I. Honeymoon,' at the Rosetta Theatre, Saturday."

Portle Plugs Return of Two 'James' Pictures

Using every exploitation medium available, Manager Robert R. Portle, of Loew's Poli Elm Street Theatre, Worcester, Mass., plugged the return engagement of "Jesse James" and "Return of Frank James."

An announcement, the day before opening of the picture, was made over Station WAAB. Heralds were distributed, 2000 by newsboys, who placed one in each Boston Record the night before the opening, and 3000 passed out house to house in the best spots in the city. Posters were put up on four high school, and all elementary school bulletin boards. Plugs were made in four night clubs, at wrestling and boxing bouts, and at the local ballroom.

Window displays included a fur store and a shoe store using stills of Gene Tierney and display cards on "Return of Frank James." A sporting goods store, a tobacconist and a men's hatter all used pictures of Tyrone Power and Henry Fonda, and stills for both pictures.

A horse-drawn covered wagon covered the town on opening day announcing the revivals. A city trucking company cooperated by putting posters on their trucks and a barn on the north road leading into the city carried a four-foot poster. The local libraries cooperated by displaying Western stories and using display cards on the picture.

'Heaven' Hobby Exhibits Displayed by Sayles

A hobby contest to exploit "Leave Her to Heaven" (based on a suggestion in the 20th-Fox press book) garnered unprecedented newspaper space in Albany, N. Y.

The contest, engineered by Alex Sayles, manager of the Palace Theatre, received a daily art and story break in Albany's Times-Union. A 3-column picture 1000-word story heralded the opening of the contest and each succeeding story was treated with similar importance.

With his eyes keyed to the box office, Sayles requested that all hobbies be submitted to the Palace Theatre for display purposes.

SHADES OF SHOWMANSHIP. Remember the good old days when theatre facades were completely covered with special fronts for such pictures as "Ten Nights in a Barroom," "The Covered Wagon," "The Iron Horse" and other spectacular films? Not since the war started, at least, have theatremen been able to get back to this old-fashioned, circus-like showmanship. But one of the postwar leaders in utilizing it once again is the management of the Plaza Theatre, Vancouver, Canada, who devised the eye-catching front shown above on Universal's "The Daltons Ride Again." Perhaps you, too, will be using such a front once again.

Compelling Copy Marks 'Staircase' Ad Copy

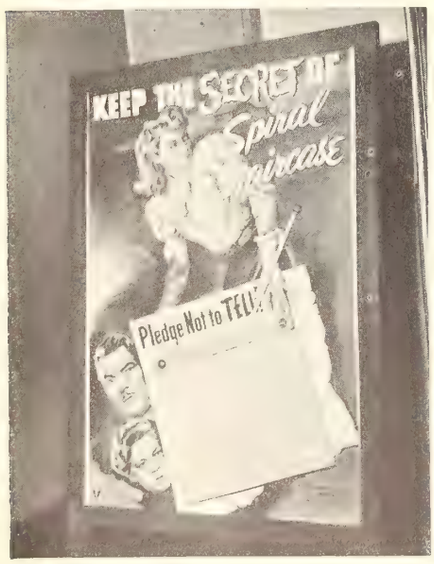
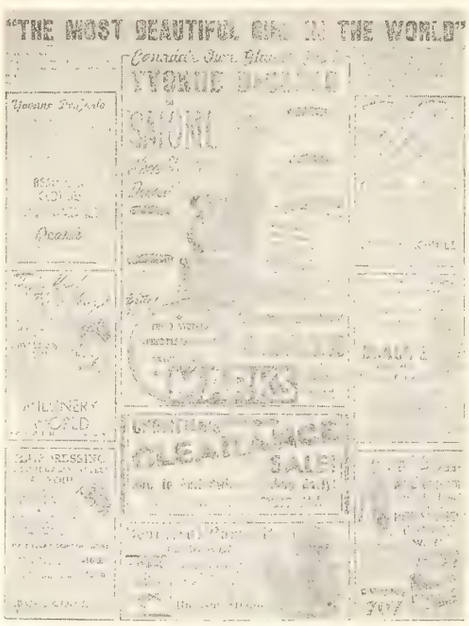
of the film and teasing prospective audiences. Copy in another ad, an adaptation of a previously described piece, states, "So Fascinating," with body copy reading "The story they said Hollywood couldn't make . . . the role they said no star could play . . . the picture you will never forget!"



In many of the larger displays small vignetted character poses of Ethel Barrymore and George Brent are superimposed against the dark backgrounds, adding more weight to the mood expressed by Miss McGuire's characterization and the copy's left-handed elusiveness.

All smaller ads in the campaign carry out the theme expressed in the large displays even down to the smallest 15-line ad which contains a line-drawing treatment of one of Miss McGuire's characteristic poses.



One other aspect of the campaign that is not consistently essayed in motion picture advertising circles is the fact that RKO Radio's national magazine advertising campaign follows the same theme, with exactly the same layouts, photographic illustrations, etc., as are contained in the newspaper campaign described herein, differing only insofar as the mechanical limitations of the two media require.

Under the direction of S. Barret McCormick, RKO Radio's director of advertising and publicity, sufficient space was contracted for far in advance of publication to insure a grand total circulation in national magazines of 33,-864,650, insuring a readership of nearly every adult in these United States! This is saturation circulation if any ever can be bought.

All advertising accessories, including the herald, window cards and outdoor posters continue to carry out a hammering of the same theme, thus establishing a complete, beautifully contrived motion picture advertising campaign.

SPECIAL TREATMENT. This special lobby display conceived by managing director R. V. Connor, Palace Theatre, N. Y. was made from a stock one sheet. Hand lettered across the top and with a blank changeable board tacked at the base to take pledged signatures it received considerable attention and many signatures. Any theatre can make a similar one at little expense.

IDEA PROMOTES CO-OP. Conceiving the line, "The Most Beautiful Girl in the World," which aroused the enthusiasm of merchants, Mel Jolley, manager of the Marks Theatre, Oshawa, Ont., promoted this co-operative page on Universal's "Salome Where She Danced." For details of Jolley's campaign, see STR, Feb. 9, p. 27.

Paramount Plans Touring Stars, Radio Buildup

More stars will be put on the road and radio exploitation will be stepped up according to public relation plans discussed between Paramount studio executives and National Director of Advertising and Publicity Curtis Mitchell. Mitchell hopes that the traveling stars will result in added glamor buildup and interest, basing this view on past experience which he said resulted in better press and fan magazine space.

The discussed plans also include a closer liaison between studio publicists, home office and field representatives.

Large Ad Campaign for 'Make Mine Music'

The largest appropriation ever set aside to advertise a Walt Disney Technicolor feature is being used by RKO Radio in launching a national pre-selling campaign on the forthcoming "Make Mine Music."

Publications, with a combined circulation of 25,000,000 copies, are being used, including Life, Look, Time, Woman's Home Companion, Collier's, True Story and Cosmopolitan, and fan magazines include Movieland, Photoplay, Modern Screen, Screen Guide, Screen Romances, Movie Life, Movie Stars Parade, Movies, Screenland, Silver Screen, Movie Show, Movie Story, Motion Picture and Screen Stars.

Sells Film's 3 Stars

Utilizing only the names of the stars—Bing Crosby, Betty Hutton and Sonny Tufts—Manager Edward C. May of Wometco's Rosetta Theatre, Miami, Fla., aroused the curiosity of patrons as to a film's title. They had to look at the theatre front to find out that it was "Here Come the Waves."

Cox' Lobby Quiz Draws Attention to Theatres

Bob Cox, Schine's city manager in Lexington, Ky., has tied in the Ben Ali Theatre with a local radio quiz show, broadcast from the lobby. The 15-minute program, which airs at noon five days a week, is written, conducted, directed, etc., by Cox, who does the interviewing. Cost for the entire program is absorbed by a local department store, which heightens interest in the quiz by inviting the audience of its other weekly program to submit questions.

People are taken off the street into the lobby where, it is found, they talk more freely than among pedestrians. Questions are asked about the current showings in the town's theatres and the persons answering correctly are given a dollar's worth of merchandise at the department store. Those who miss their questions are given two theatre tickets as are those who submit questions used on the program.

The free rein that Bob Cox has in the running of the program affords him great opportunity to plug his theatre and its attractions. He misses no occasion to interview publicity men or film company representatives who come to town.

Widespread Promotion Backs Film's Opening

Widespread promotion by Willis Kinnear, advertising and publicity director for the Paramount Hollywood and Downtown theatres in Hollywood and Los Angeles, respectively, heralded the world premiere day-and-date opening of Republic's "Murder in the Music Hall."

Large display advertisements were utilized in the newspaper press, with Kinnear stressing the thrill angle.

One hundred seventy-five six-sheets in four colors were posted before and after the premiere.

Kinnear also arranged for 500 street car cards to be placed in prominent spots. In addition, 75 similar cards were planted in the buses of the Asbury lines, and 100 posters spotted in hotels, restaurants and department stores.

MILLENIUM? Copy on this bar and grill's hanging sign was arranged for by Arthur Groom, Loew's Theatre, Evansville, Ind., and reaches the height of something or other. The tieup may be obscure, but the dope is there.

Unusual Stunt Keys 'Staircase' Selling

An unusual development of an unusual stunt was arranged by Bob Sidman, manager of the Senate Theatre, Harrisburg, when he "sneak-previewed" RKO Radio's "The Spiral Staircase" at the close of one of the theatre's regular performances and arranged to have the film cut off just at its most suspenseful moment so that comments from those present might be recorded for broadcasting.

Sidman set the "sneak preview" well in advance of the film's regular showing and invited the press, radio commentators and civic officials, as well as patrons who wished to remain for the extra attraction. About 125 persons took advantage of the invitation.

When the thriller was cut off the screen Dick Redmond, WHP program director, a recently returned war correspondent and other WHP announcers went through the audience interviewing those present on their reactions. They were asked to identify the killer, what they would do under similar circumstances, how the film compared with other mysteries and similar questions.

Among those interviewed were Mayor Howard E. Milliken, Mrs. Milliken, "Skee" Yovan, assistant manager of Loew's Regent Theatre, and Mrs. Yovan, several returned servicemen and others chosen at random. When the transcription had been completed Sidman picked up the feature a few feet from where it had been cut and ran it through to its surprise conclusion.

The transcription was broadcast over WHP the night before the film opened at the Senate, providing a top-notch "teaser" to the film's exploitation campaign.—HA.

Book, Cosmetic Displays Aid 'Whistle' in Detroit

An Ava Gardner cosmetics promotion with drug and department stores, book store window displays and other promotional pieces in the local Arthur Murray Studios highlighted the away-from-the-theatre exploitation used to promote the showing of Seymour Nebenzal's "Whistle Stop" at the Palm State Theatre in Detroit. Extra advertising space and increased publicity breaks, together with four days of spot radio announcements and free spots on sponsored shows also were used.

Frank Upton and Alice Gorham of the Palm State set the campaign.

ARCHERY DISPLAY. One of the obvious but effetcive window display tieups arranged for Columbia's "Bandit of Sherwood Forest" by Manager Gerry Wollaston when the film played the StateTheatre, Harrisburg. Window background of sporting goods store was of knotty pine, enhancing the value of the colorful archery display.

Paging Mr. Harvey's Clan

A rumor that a branch of the famous Harvey family now resides in the vicinity of Boston has started Managers James Tibbetts of the State and Jack Mercer of the Orpheum on a widespread search for one or more descendants of the man who started the chain of restaurants in the midwest during the latter part of the 19th century and whose story of success is the basis for MGM's Technicolor production, "The Harvey Girls." If the search is successful it is planned to arrange a special party in their honor with newspaper and radio people also to be in attendance. Other stunts now being set by publicists George Kraska, Joe DiPesa, Vaughn O'Neill, Len Briggs, Olga Bruno and Tom Clark, include a horse and buggy gag, a tieup with the local Santa Fe Railroad agency through co-op ads, window displays of women's dresses and hats worn in the latter part of the 19th century, window displays at music stores, beauty shops, etc., with the music to be plugged through every available outlet.

Safety Council Tieup On 'Danger Signal'

First tieup of its kind ever made with the Cleveland Police Department Safety Council, whereby they posted several hundred cards with copy relating to a current motion picture, was arranged in connection with the showing of Warners' "Danger Signal," at Loew's Ohio Theatre, managed by Gertrude L. Tracy.

The cards were prominently displayed in all parts of the city.

Another interesting and effective promotion was put on in cooperation with Woolworth's stores, where the cards in the weighing machines were numbered and guest tickets to "Danger Signal" were awarded to winners. This stunt went over big, with the picture getting many plugs throughout the store and additional plugs at night when the weighing machines were placed outside the store where the big "Danger Signal" sign on top of the machines attracted a lot of attention.

The campaign also included window displays in Hoffman's Candy Store, two Mercer's Florist Shops, Jules Optical Co., Woolworth's cosmetic window, three Miller Drug Stores and other shops.

A false front was erected in front of the Ohio Theatre to play up the psychological angle.

Line in 'Saratoga Trunk' Inspires Cigar Tieup

A line in Warners' "Saratoga Trunk" served to bring the Cigar Institute of America into an exploitation stunt in connection with the opening of the film at the Strand, Albany, N. Y.

The institute tossed a dinner in the DeWitt Clinton Hotel, preceded by a special screening for business, civic, legislative, press and radio leaders.

The line that did the trick is actress Ingrid Bergman's "a cigar smoker is so masculine."

'Babies' Radio Dramatized

Radio station WNEW's Coming Attraction program on Sunday from 2 to 2:30 p.m. last week featured a dramatization of Monogram's "Black Market Babies" with the script based on articles from the Woman's Home Companion and Readers Digest, exposing what has been called "one of America's most shameful rackets." This is the fifth dramatization of Monogram films placed on the program by Madeline White through an arrangement with Jack Grogan, the show's producer.

Max Factor Window Used

One of the most effective tieups in connection with the showing of Columbia's "Pardon My Past" at the RKO Palace, Cleveland, was the promotion of a large window display on Max Factor products in the largest Woolworth store in the city.

,Music, Beauty Tieups on Say Yes' in Baltimore

Utilizing a 30x40 sepia-colored blowup of Charles Winninger playing a trumpet, Manager Bert Claster of the Hippodrome Theatre, Baltimore, and his publicity director, Ted Rouston, arranged a window display with four downtown music shops in connection with the showing of Columbia's "She Wouldn't Say Yes."

Musical instruments were displayed in connection with the Winninger blowup which carried a panel with this tie-in line: " 'She Wouldn't Say Yes' Until He Bought a (name) Trumpet (on sale here). See 'She Wouldn't Say Yes' at the Hippodrome Theatre."

Claster and Rouston also arranged with the local distributor of the Helene Curtis Park Avenue Machineless Wave to have 20 leading Baltimore beauty salons feature blowups of Adele Jergens. In most cases, the blowups, surrounded by attractive 8x10s of Miss Jergens and highlighted by flowers and displays of the product, were placed in prominent locations in the salons where they would attract maximum attention.

'Shady Lady' Folders Exploiting 'Lost Weekend'

Distributing a couple of thousand cartoon novelty style folders via hotels, restaurants, lunch room counters, etc., plugging "Shady Lady," proved to be an effective selling stunt for Edward C. May, manager of Wometco's Rosetta Theatre, Miami, Fla.

CUTOUTS SELL TICKETS. J. J. Parker's Broadway Theatre, Portland, Ore., capitalized on the value of ticket-selling cutouts and poster displays for Universal's "Scarlet Street" to attract patronage in the Rose City. Foyer also carried illuminated 24-sheet one week in advance of playdate.

THE BOX OFFICE SLANT

To Each His Own

Paramount Drama 122 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) A tear-jerker, if there ever was one, that will hit women with a terrific impact and also have appeal for men—especially people who lived through World War I.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Olivia DeHavilland has a good name for marquees and the film should do well in a word-of-mouth campaign. Only possible handicap might be the title, which has little box-office allure.

Cast: Olivia De Havilland, Mary Anderson, John Lund, Roland Culver, Phillip Terry, Bill Goodwin, Virginia Welles, Willard Robertson, Victoria Horne, Arthur Loft, Griff Barnett, Alma Macrorie, Bill Ward, Frank Faylen, Virginia Farmer, Doris Lloyd, Clyde Cook, Ida Moore, Mary Young. Credits: Produced by Charles Brackett. Directed by Mitchell Leisen. Screenplay by Charles Brackett and Jacques Thery from a story by Charles Brackett. Photography, Daniel L. Fapp. A Mitchell Leisen Production.

Plot: This is the story of a woman and the five men in her life; of frustrated mother-love, when she bears the illegitimate child of a World War I hero whose identity she cannot reveal. She devotes her life to building up a career for herself, and 20 years later, in London, is reunited with her child when he penetrates the identity of the mysterious older woman who befriended him.

Comment: The writers of this screenplay have effectively created situations that will bring copious tears to every woman in the audience and will leave many a man with reddened eyes. The appeal is undeniable for all, but especially for people who remember World War I. Once a patron sees the picture, he will undoubtedly recommend it; this word-of-mouth campaign should increase box-office grosses and do much to counteract the weak title. The tempo is built up beautifully, with the end deftly handled, where it might have lapsed into extreme melodrama. Miss De Havilland is excellent as the small town girl who lives a life of frustrations. Muchly touted newcomer John Lund is a bit harsh in his speech, but screens handsomely. Charles Brackett certainly deserves extra plaudits for his remarkably versatile work on this picture. Not only did he write the original story, but he and Jacques Thery deftly handled the long screenplay; then, too, Brackett produced the entire film. A triple-threat man, if there ever was one. Mitchell Leisen does a fine job of direction, keeping the story moving at a smooth pace, despite the film's length.

The Green Years

MGM Drama 127 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Beautifully written, produced, directed and magnificently acted, "The Green Years" should prove one of the year's best films. Will vastly entertain all types of audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Lacking top marquee names, the film nevertheless has all the other ammunition necessary to build top box-office grosses. MGM's plan of exploitation is brilliantly conceived and, followed accurately, should do much better than good for the film.

Cast: Charles Coburn, Tom Drake, Beverly Tyler, Hume Cronyn, Gladys Cooper, Dean Stockwell, Selena Royle, Jessica Tandy, Richard Haydn, Andy Clyde, Norman Lloyd, Robert North, Wallace Ford, Eilene Janssen, Hank Daniels, Richard Lyon, Henry O'Neill, Henry Stephenson, Norma Varden. Credits: Directed by Victor Saville. Produced by Leon Gordon. Screenplay by Robert Ardrey and Sonya Levien based on a novel by A. J. Cronin. Musical Score, Herbert Stothart. Photography, George Folsey.

Plot: The story treats, biographically, of the life of an orphaned boy in Scotland (Dean Stockwell as a child—Tom Drake as a young man)—of the every-day living, the tragedies, the frustrations and of the happiness experienced, colored by his close association with a philosophical great-grandfather (Charles Coburn), close friendship for a lad of his age (Hank Daniels) and his love for Beverly Tyler. His overwhelming ambition to study medicine has been foiled by a penny-pinching guardian (Hume Cronyn) and finally is achieved through the will of the doting great-grandfather.

Comment: A. J. Cronin seems to have a flair for the creation of human, lovable characters in stories which, as motion pictures, succeed in giving audiences a pleasurable sense of well being. So it is with "The Green Years." The story is a simple one, but the characters have been so expertly limned that they grow on the spectator. Charles Coburn's interpretation of the doughty old Scottish great-grandfather is probably the best thing this actor has ever done, outstanding in an outstanding film. And the others are no less expert. Hume Cronyn as a penny-pinching, mean head of a family that is not poor "but thinks poor" and consequently lives far beneath its means, is the cause of Tom Drake's frustration before his great-grandfather's death and subsequent willing of his small insurance estate so that Drake may study as he wishes or "spend it on wine, women and song." Dean Stockwell, who plays as a child the character so eloquently portrayed by Drake as a young man, is so good as to be close to great. The youngster's face is expressive; whoever taught him to convey fine shades of meaning just by a lift of the eyebrows has accomplished no mean feat with so young a player. Space limitations obviate the possibility of commenting on the many other excellently played parts, but it is sufficient to say that they all are much better than good—all seem to have been inspired to do better than ever before. The production values are superb, with Producer Leon Gordon even going to the extent of reproducing a Scottish country fair on such a scale that the camera catches all of the bigness of it in a preliminary shot, closing in to the individual activities. Victor Saville's direction is beyond criticism, the musical score is wonderful and the camera work is superb. One could not ask for better entertainment. Intelligently exploited, "The Green Years" should be one of the year's best box-office bets.

Paramount Drama 57 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) The entire family will enjoy this story about returned soldiers who try to help out the family of a buddy left behind.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Good program offering for any spot.

Cast: William Gargan, Jean Rogers, Philip Reed, Larry Young, Harry Cording, Will Wright, Elaine Riley, Virginia Brissac, David Holt, Dick Elliot. Credits: Produced by William Pine and William Thomas. Directed by Lew Landers. Original screenplay by Geoffrey Homes. Photography, Fred Jackman.

Plot: When two ex-soldiers return from Europe and visit the family of a pal who was killed in action, they find things in a bad state. The family's trucking business is about to be stolen by a competitor who has already sabotaged their trucks. In a series of slam-bang encounters, the two pals wallop the villain, and one of them wins the beautiful girl.

Comment: This latest Pine-Thomas offering is good melodrama with a timely touch, since it concerns returned soldiers. Story is interesting, with many touches of humor punctuating the action and melodramatics. Cast is well chosen, with Gargan swell as an ex-baseball player and Philip Reed also swell as his buddy and former college man. Jean Rogers makes a very impressive and capable leading lady, and Larry Young and Harry Cording do okay in the villain roles. Lew Landers' direction handles the players well and gives the picture as much action as possible in a story that has occasion for little. Production is up to the standard set by other offerings from William Pine and William Thomas.

The Postman Always Rings Twice

MGM Drama 113 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Readers of the Cain novel will find that the stark realism and tense drama of the book have been only partially realized on the screen. Others will discuss the allure and glamor and fashions of Lana Turner and her love scenes with Garfield in what they will consider to have been an entertaining evening at the movies.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: The names of Turner and Garfield on the marquee, and the popularity of the novel, assure terrific box-office returns.

Cast: Lana Turner, John Garfield, Cecil Kellaway, Hume Cronyn, Leon Ames, Audrey Totter. Alan Reed, Jeff York. Produced by Carey Wilson. Directed by Tay Garnett. Screenplay by Harry Ruskin and Nevin Busch. Based on the novel by James M. Cain. Photography, Sidney Wagner. Art direction, Cedric Gibbons, Randall Duell. Musical score, George Bassman.

Plot: An arrogant young hitchhiker who stops at a roadside cafe falls in love with the unhappy wife of the proprietor. Faced with deceit and a hide-and-seek affair, they kill her husband. Although acquitted of the murder charge, and free to marry, the couple is still suspected by the district attorney. They now begin to fear and distrust each other until he proves his love by saving her from drowning. On their way home, happy at last, she is killed in an automobile accident and, by an ironical twist of fate, he is convicted of her murder.

Comment: Stored on the shelf for several years because of the Production Code, then brought out for screen treatment apparently on the strength of the success of two other adaptations of Cain novels ("Double Indemnity" and "Mildred Pierce"), "The Postman Always Rings Twice," one of James M. Cain's shortest novels and perhaps his most daring exposition of elemental passions, reaches the screen in a necessarily whitewashed version to conform to Production Code requirements. At least a decade old, the novel has had a wider reading audience than fiction of more recent vintage; thus the percentage of "book-to-screen" spectators is bound to be higher than average. For this reason, there will be considerable pro and con discussion of the film's merit, which will react strongly in its favor at the box-office. Readers will find the plot motivation toned down; they will find the principal characters (with the exception of John Garfield) not the types drawn by Cain; and they will find that the stark realism and tense drama of the book have been only partially realized on the screen. On the other hand, patrons who haven't read the book are likely to consider the picture an entertaining drama highlighted by Lana Turner who, besides being easy to look at and exhuding a generous amount of sex appeal, will attract heavy patronage. From an acting standpoint, however, Miss Turner fails to project the inner conflict, the frustrated desire that marked Cain's Cora Smith. One is more conscious of Lana Turner than the character she portrays. John Garfield has been ideally cast as the arrogant hitchhiker, but his performance appears subordinated to that of his co-star, thus detracting from its effectiveness. Of the supporting players, nearly all of whom seem to have been chosen for "stock" portrayals so as not to disparage the two principals, Hume Cronyn stands out in a brief role as a defense attorney, while Cecil Kellaway, as the roadside cafe proprietor and husband of Miss Turner, portrays a character which the book impressed as being not quite so refined as Mr. Kellaway plays him. The others, including Leon Ames, Audrey Totter, Alan Reed and Jeff York, are little more than adequate. The popularity of the stars and the novel should bring the crowds in droves, with the book-readers making the inevitable comparisons between book and picture, and non-readers discussing the allure and glamor and fashions of Miss Turner and her love scenes with Mr. Garfield.

Song of Arizona

Republic Western-With-Songs 68 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Another Roy Rogers for the entertainment of those who enjoy plenty of song numbers, instead of the customary action and excitement.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Not up to the standard set by previous Rogers offerings in that it lacks thrills, fast action. Should do well, however.

Cast: Roy Rogers, Trigger, George "Gabby" Hayes, Dale Evans, Lyle Talbot, Tommy Cook, Johnny Calkins, Sarah Edwards, Tommy Ivo, Michael Chapin, Dick Curtis, Edmund Cobb, Tom Quinn, Kid Chissell, Robert Mitchell Boychoir, Bob Nolan and Sons of the Pioneers. Credits: Directed by Frank McDonald. Original story by Bradford Ropes. Screenplay by M. Coates Webster. Photography, Reggie Lanning. Associate Producer, Edward J. White.

Plot: Rogers, a well-known radio singer, goes back to his hometown to help Gabby in his efforts to help homeless boys. The bank carries a mortgage on Gabby's place, and it is up to Rogers and Gabby to find a way to pay it off. One of the boys, the son of a killer, finally sends in the necessary amount from his father's cache, but this only leads them all into trouble. Eventually everything ends happily for all concerned.

Comment: Each succeeding Roy Rogers pictures seems to become more of a musical than a western, and in this latest film one finds a fine example of just that. Here, instead of story and action, there are eight musical numbers that take the place of the excitement and thrills one expects to find in a Rogers picture. The song has replaced the villainous doings and Trigger's exciting chases, for here he is only seen in one or two mild rides, which help classify this as an outdoor picture. Most of the running time is taken up with music, with little plot to hold it together. Production is on a par with other Rogers pictures—tops—and the cast is just as good as ever. Roy presents five songs, the title number, which he sings with Bob Nolan and the Sons of the Pioneers, three with Dale Evans (as charming and capable as always) and one with the Robert Mitchell Boychoir. "Gabby" Hayes capably handles the role assigned to him and Lyle Talbot, Tommy Cook and Sarah Edwards are others in the cast who measure up. Direction by Frank McDonald spotted the musical numbers well and got fine performances from the players, but there was little he could do about the action and thrills, for it wasn't in the story. Production credit goes to Edward J. White.

Gentlemen With Guns

PRC Western 52 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: Some action with fists, but little gunplay.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Buster Crabbe and Fuzzy St. John for the marquees should be sufficient where Westerns are popular.

Cast: Buster Crabbe, Al (Fuzzy) St. John, Patricia Knox, Steve Darrell, George Chesebro, Karl Hackett, Budd Buster, Frank Ellis. Credits: Produced by Sigmund Neufeld. Original story and screenplay by Fred Myton. Directed by Sam Newfield. Photography, Jack Greenhalgh

Plot: Fuzzy St. John is about to enter into a mail order marriage with hard-boiled Patricia Knox and additional trouble comes his way when he won't give up valuable water rights to Steve Darrell. He sends for his pal, Buster Crabbe. Fuzzy is framed for a murder and he and Buster clean up the opposition, Patricia leaves town and everything is serene again.

Comment: Produced with a low budget and acted with the usual nonchalant competence of its chief actors, this is not quite up to the usual action requirements of Westerns, even though a few fist fights work out the right way. There is no visible gun play, the only shots fired being heard and not seen. The plot is thin and obvious, but the Western fans probably will find it sufficiently interesting. Names should draw where Westerns are popular. Otherwise suitable for double-bill programs.

Our Hearts Were Growing Up

Paramount Comedy 83 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) More adventures for the two girls in "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay." As entertaining as its predecessor.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: The selling angle of "two girls fighting to keep the men they love" should help attract patronage.

Cast: Gail Russell, Diana Lynn, Brian Donlevy, James Brown, Bill Edwards, William Demarest, Billy DeWolfe, Sharen Douglas, Mary Hatcher, Sara Haden, Mikhail Rasumny, Isabel Randolph, Frank Faylen. Credits: Produced by Daniel Dare. Directed by William D. Russell. Screenplay by Norman Panama and Melvin Frank. Based on a story by Frank Waldman. Photography, Stuart Thompson.

Plot: Further adventures, romantic and other wise, of those irrepressibles of the '20s. This time, the girls meet up with a bootlegger, invade Greenwich Village where they run into all sorts of strange characters, and have a brief but exciting fling as careerists.

Comment: This is a continuation of the adventures that befell the two leading characters of "Our Hearts Were Young and Gay": Cornelia Otis Skinner and Emily Kimbrough. "Our Hearts Were Growing Up" concerns the upsets and seeming tragedies of young women fighting to hold their men. It is a light comedy that has moments of humor and gaiety which, since it revolves around the desperate plight of the young girls, has more heart interest than its predecessors. Otherwise it is similar in mood, period and general atmosphere, which makes it a good follow-up for those theatregoers who enjoyed the first offering. The same players have the leading roles, Diana Lynn and Gail Russell, and James Brown and Bill Edwards again play the boys they love. In roles that sail through smoothly, for it is right up their alley, Brian Donlevy and William Demarest do all right as two bootleggers, and Billy DeWolfe gets a chance to go through some of his comedy routines, which are responsible for most of the picture's laughs. Direction is by William D. Russell and Daniel Dare produced.

Roaring Rangers

Columbia Western With Music 58 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Another in the "Durango Kid" series to please Western audiences, with good hillbilly music thrown in for added measure.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: The combination of Charles Starrett and Smiley Burnette, who work together in smooth style, should have good box-office appeal.

Cast: Charles Starrett, Smiley Burnette, Adelle Roberts, Jack Rockwell, Edward Cassidy, Mickey Kuhn, Ed Cobb, Merle Travis and his Broncho Busters. Credits: Producer, Colbert Clark. Director, Ray Nazarro. Screenplay, Barry Shipman. Photography, George Kelley.

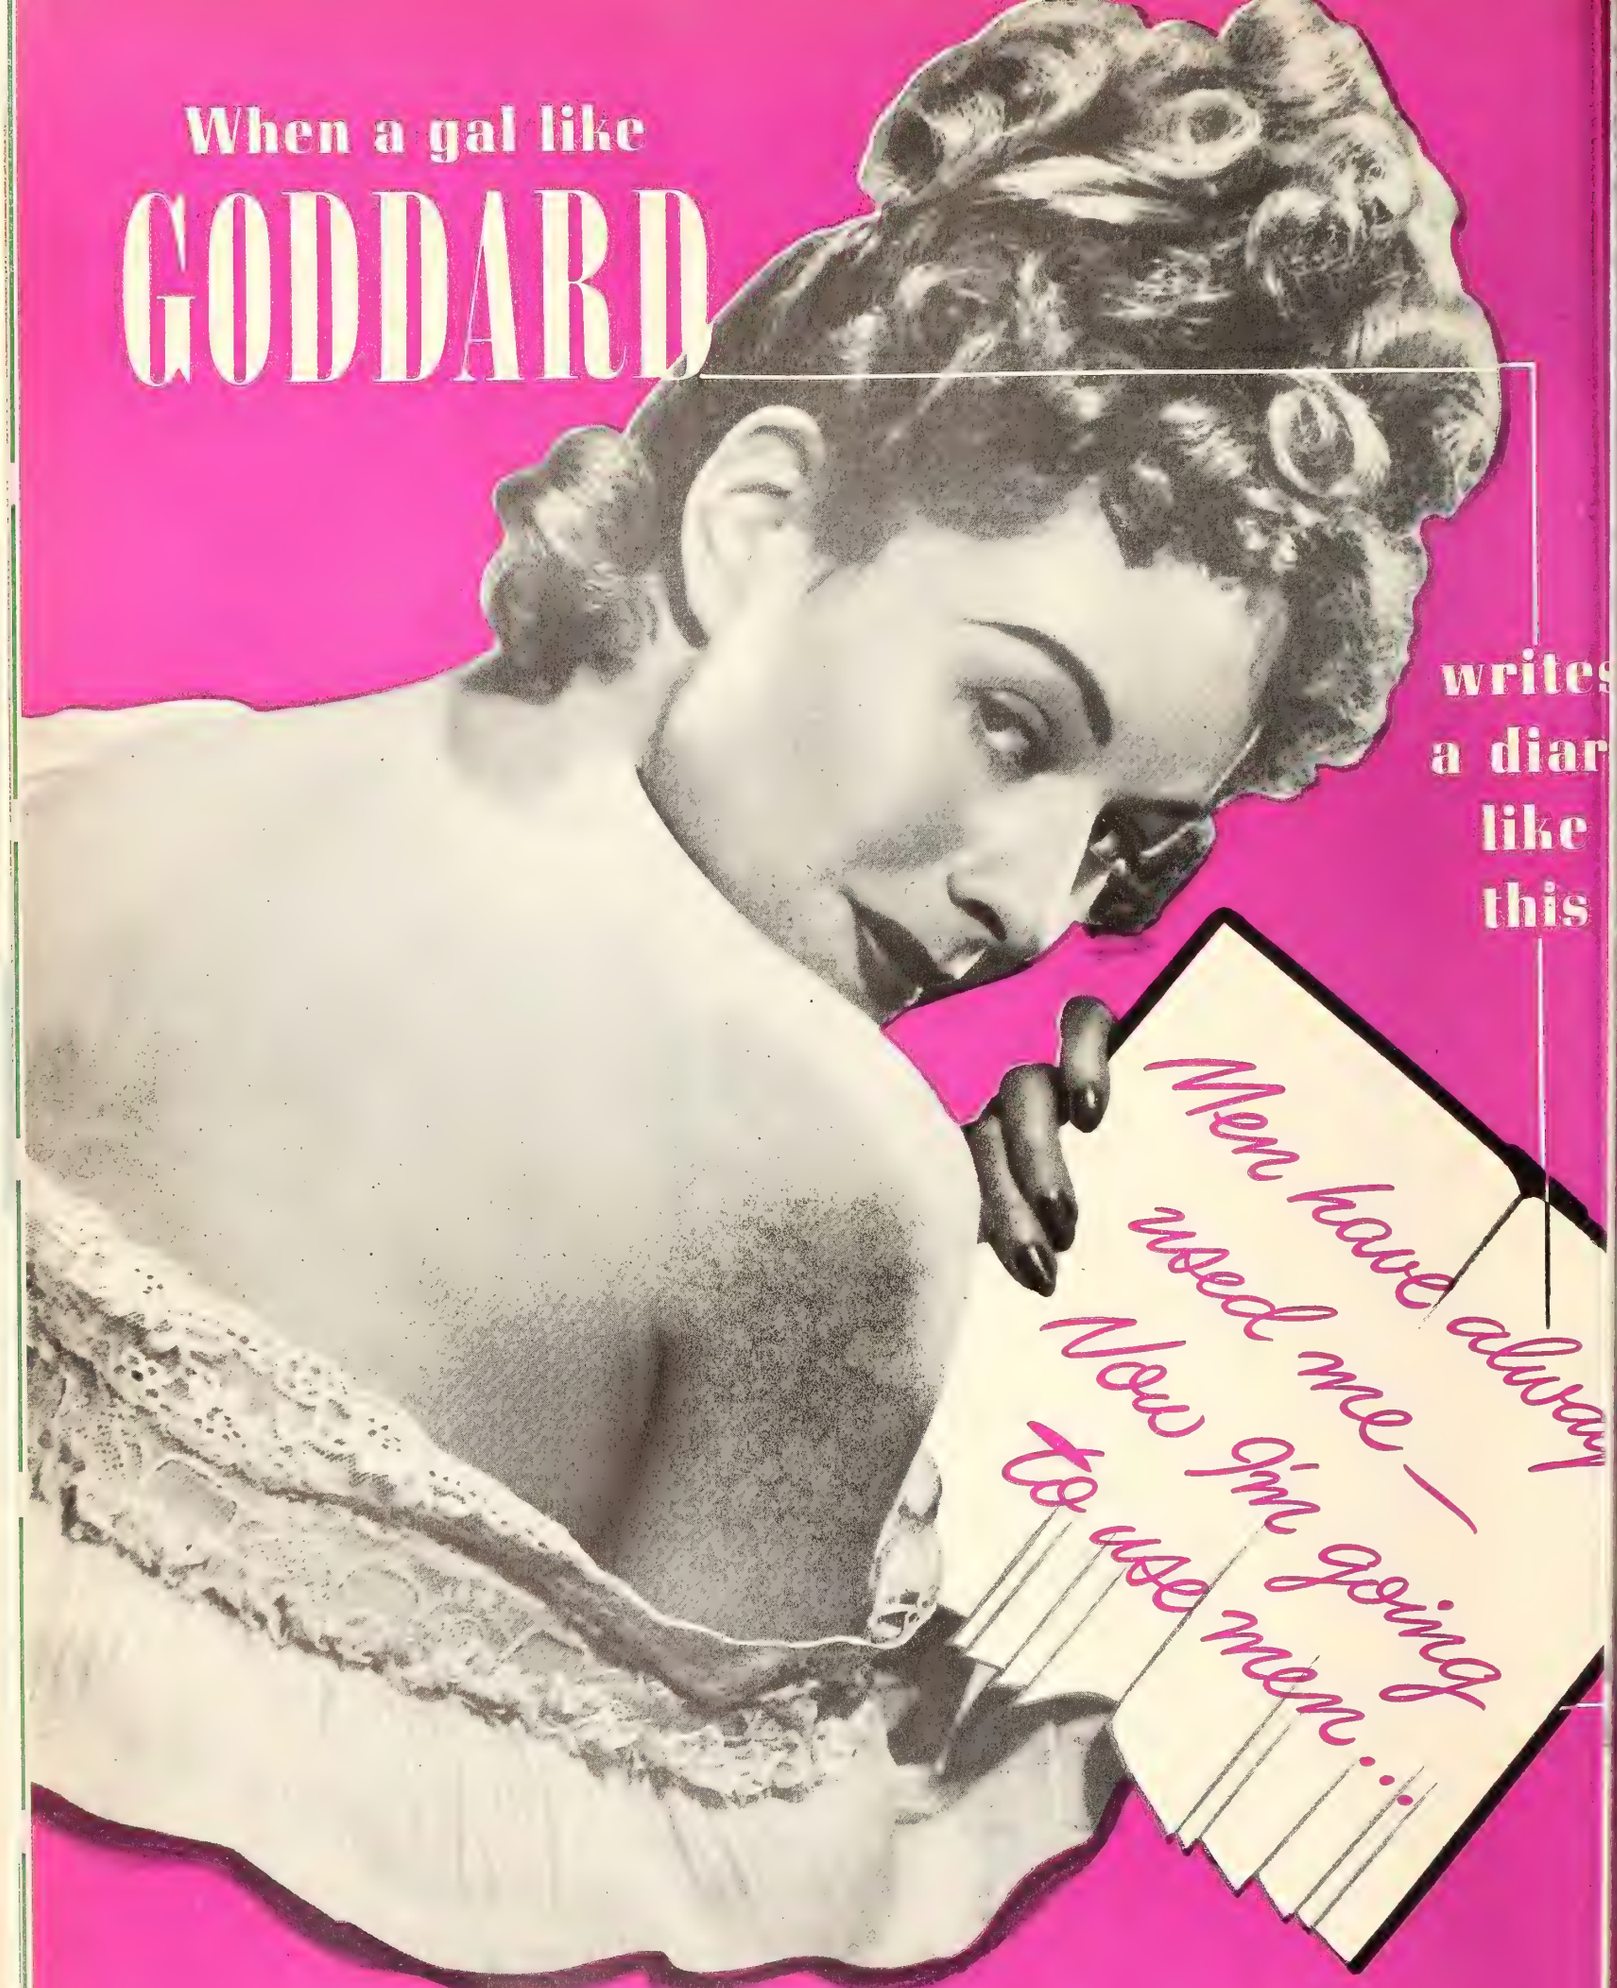
Plot: A frontier community is having trouble with outlaws, when the Durango Kid appears, posing as a rancher. Complications arise when an outlaw also poses as the Durango Kid. This outlaw is the hireling of the town's saloon-keeper, who is the leader of the gang, and the sheriff's brother. Just as the gang tries to conduct a fake auction to impoverish the good citizens, the real Durango Kid exposes the deal.

Comment: Production values are good in this most recent Durango Kid release. It is difficult to beat Smiley Burnette as a Western comic, and Columbia really has something in this seasoned performer. Starrett continues to rate as one of the most likable and virile screen cowboys. The pace of the film is well sustained, and the music is interspersed in such a way as not to interfere with the tempo. Merle Travis and his Broncho Busters have an excellent hillbilly band. Photographer George Kelley turned in an adequate job, with the chases and outdoor scenery right up to snuff.

The Strange Love of Martha Ivers

Paramount Drama 116 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) A powerful dose of exciting melodrama excellently produced, directed and acted from a top-notch script. It should please all types of adult audiences.



BOX-OFFICE SLANT: First magnitude marquee names and enthusiastic word-of-mouth praise should make this a formidable contender for top box-office grosses.

Cast: Barbara Stanwyck, Van Heflin, Lizabeth Scott, Kirk Douglas, Judith Anderson, Roman Bohnen, Darryl Hickman, Janis Wilson, Ann Doran, Frank Orth, James Flavin, Mickey Kuhn, Charles D Brown. Credits: Produced by Hal Wallis. Directed by Lewis Milestone. Screenplay by Robert Rossen from an original story by Jack Patrick. Photography, Victor Milner. Musical score, Miklos Rozsa.

Plot: Barbara Stanwyck as a girl, kills her aunt accidentally in a fit of frustrated rage. The act is witnessed by Kirk Douglas whose father then holds his knowledge of the crime over Miss Stanwyck's head to force a marriage of the two when they become adult. They think another boy (Van Heflin as a man) saw the crime (he didn't) but Miss Stanwyck is sure he'll never tell. Years later Van Heflin returns to his native town of Iverson, finds Miss Stanwyck married to Douglas. Heflin has become acquainted with Lizabeth Scott. Miss Stanwyck and Douglas are convinced that Heflin is out for blackmail and when she tries to win him by charms, and loses, her husband kills her and himself. Van leaves with Lizabeth, indicating an early marriage.

Comment: From every point of view, including story, screenplay, production, direction and acting, "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers" is a powerful dose of exciting melodrama. Hal Wallis has given the film every possible aid in production values and has cast the story exceedingly well. Lewis Milestone carries the ball from there as well, if not better, than the veteran director ever has done. Miss Stanwyck is superb, as usual, but it is Van Heflin who really takes over the screen each time he enters the scene. The character is ideal for his particular talents and he has a field day. He's tough and tender and impulsive in turn and whatever mood he portrays he is utterly convincing. Lizabeth Scott, too, is excellent most of the time but indicates an intrusive tendency toward "mugging." Kirk Douglas, as the bibulous, vacillating husband of Miss Stanwyck, portrays a "weak sister" very well indeed. Minor parts, including the principals as children also are well played. Top-drawer direction, sparkling dialog and convincing situations combine to make this film one of the really fine productions of this or any season. Adult audiences will enjoy it thoroughly and it ought to do much better than average business everywhere.

Gilda

Columbia Drama 110 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: Engrossing drama interspersed with lively solo dance and song numbers of the sophisticated night-club variety and a picture of very "different" content and treatment for star Rita Hayworth. A picture for the grownups for whom it will register as sure-fire entertainment in all situations.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Something for the boys (that "Put the Blame on Mame" number of Hayworth alone will make the males glad their women made 'em go to the movies this night) and a picture that should register robust grosses in any showman's theatre.

Cast: Rita Hayworth, Glenn Ford, George Macready, Joseph Calleia, Steven Geray, Joe Sawyer, Gerald Mohr, Robert Scott, Ludwig Donath, Don Douglas, Lionel Royce, S. Z. Martel and others. Credits: Directed by Charles Vidor. Produced by Virginia Van Upp. Story by E. A. Ellington. Adaptation by Joe Eisinger. Screenplay by Marion Parsonnet. Director of photography, Rudolph Mate. Art direction by Stephen Goosson, Van Nest Polglase. Songs "Put the Blame on Mame" and "Amado Mio" by Allan Roberts and Doris Fisher.

Plot: Glenn Ford, trying to forget it all in Buenos Aires, soon goes from stoney broke to living on velvet because of his skill as a gambler and his ability to throw a punch fast and accurately. He becomes confidential assistant to George Macready, owner of a lavish gambling club as well as the directing genius of a cartel operating in tungsten under the top command of German interests. The gambling hall owner returns from a trip married, his bride being Rita Hayworth —former flame of Ford's. Bitterness between these two is the outcome of their intense love, but neither sees that until Ford, acting out of loyalty for his financial benefactor, plays guard over Rita to keep her for Macready. The latter gets into trouble and in a spectacular departure from Buenos Aires is considered lost when his plane is seen to fall into the sea. Actually he escapes and returns to threaten Ford and Hayworth just as they have found that the veil of misunderstanding between them has been torn away. The climax sees Macready killed in self defense and happy reunion for the former night club singer and dancer and her sweetheart.

Comment: The winning combination of Charles Vidor, Virginia Van Upp and Rita Hayworth has had something added and the latter is all to the good for purposes of suspenseful screen entertainment. The most important additions are Glenn Ford in a vigorous and grateful part, and a story of fundamentally sound dramatic motivation and no little theatrical skill on the part of the writers. The direction, of course, is superior. The glamorous Miss Hayworth ventures into the paths of histrionic flourish and in a series of dramatic scenes acquits herself most commendably. Frankly, we think that were the Hayworth beauty less electric, these acting displays of the star who is known most faborably and affectionately for her eye-filling dances and a matching aural accompaniment of throaty, emotion-stirring singing, would be far more impressive in their own right and that the star would be winning more plaudits than will be hers for this acting performance. Never mind that—the important thing is that Columbia here offers a bang-up picture for any theatre. It's entertainment for the adults—not necessarily because of its several very sensuous scenes but rather that much of it will be over the heads of the very young and too lacking in the kind of action that means entertainment to them. There is good dramatic suspense maintained throughout this show and if, at times, there is sign of some strain on the spectator because the script has not in some clever way contrived to let the audience in more on the past of the two lovers, that is more than offset by the absorbing interest the authors, the directors particularly, and the very able players have exercised in carrying out their assigned duties. High on the list of good performances by screen players must go the job turned in here by George Macready as the mysterious head-man of the cartel and owner of the gambling casino that is a mere "front" for international skullduggery. Steven Geray also is outstanding in his role as the philosophic old bird who runs the wash room at the gambling hall. It is an entirely outstanding cast. The picture will generate, we feel sure, some outstanding box-office "pull" during its key runs and thus it seems certain that there will be much showmanship material with which to work when "Gilda" plays its general first-runs and the later showings. It is the kind of show that deserves good showmanship on the part of every exhibitor who presents it at his theatre.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

DO YOU MAKE ADVERTISING PAY?

By Jack Jackson

Here's down-to-earth discussion of the whys and wherefores of good, profitable advertising for the theatre—most active of all advertisers. Theatre owners and managers can benefit by a thorough analysis of their advertising efforts and expenditures and the means of assaying the value of both—the efforts and dollars, that is—is outlined very concisely and most practically in terms of showmanship in this straight-from-the-shoulder article written by a theatreman with years of experience and outstanding show-selling records to his credit.

How about your advertising? Are the dollars you send winging out from the theatre cashbox along the familiar advertising paths (I mean the long-established, week-to-week or program-to-program procedures) attired in that Circe array and possessed of the Siren tonal allure that will seduce and decoy an appreciable number of similar greenbacks to follow the homing dollars on their way back to your box-office? Indeed, are you quite sure that your own dollars will find their way back to your theatre? That can happen to you—it does to all theatremen who have gotten into a mere habit of putting dollars into the same slots of the advertising machine and so never even notice whether they have tied off the jack-pot release thus eliminating all opportunity for the higher prize-winning combinations and leaving themselves only the cherries and lemons on the revolving wheels.

Believe me, Mister Showman, there are an awful lot of your fellows in that kind of a rut and it may be wise to take a thorough check to see if you happened inadvertently, to join the ranks of those who are bucketing their money into wells that have long since gone "customer-dry." Just as your exhibition success depends on constant change and revamping of the entertainment quotient you offer the public, so does your advertising success depend on the development of new and different manners of attracting attention to your establishment and its merchandise.

Of course there are certain media that can be depended on to "touch" the interest of certain elements of patron potential and such media are deserving of a place in your advertising budget. Newspaper, radio, attraction boards, front display, lobby and trailers are the highest rated and promise the greatest reward of consistent return. But, if you'll take the time to study these factors you'll find that the injection of a little novelty in their makeup and presentation will result in their "grabbing" and "holding" rather than "touching" and "reaching" the attention of observers.

Change Style of Signature Cut

How long has it been since you changed the style of your signature cut? Do you vary the day-to-day size of your newspaper ad? Is it a regular weekly recurring procedure? If so, try running the big ad on Monday instead of Sunday, straight type with a clever catchline instead of an illustration, double column instead of single column and vice versa. Try making use of a small ad on the sport page when you have an athletic picture. Get some space on the women's page when you have a "Leave Her to Heaven" and don't forget that the classified columns will reach still another segment of newspaper readers.

Before you write an ad study the emotional appeal of your pictures and fight for the right words to stimulate in the readers the kind of reaction that will make them want to grab their hats and head straight for your box-office. Check the proofs to see that what you have to say is properly presented in the most forceful type fonts. It's true that "Type Talks" but it has a very monotonous voice when no variation exists in the style or size of face used. Give imagination full rein in preparing layouts so that when the display appears it will have an attractive shape to command attention more forcibly than the companion ads that surround it. Remember that newspaper display is probably

Woodin Family Seeks Old Friends For Fete

Larry Woodin of the Arcadia Theatre, Wellsboro, Pennsylvania, is at present expending every possible effort to make contact with the Woodin family's scattered friends in the motion picture business in an attempt to invite them to a gala celebration to be held June 22nd at Wellsboro at which time and place the industry, with the cooperation of producers, distributors and just plain friends, is scheduled to pay tribute to one of the pioneer families of show business with an aggregate service of 219 years!

June 22nd will mark Larry Woodin's 20th year at the Arcadia Theatre in Wellsboro and also will pay tribute to the fact that his father, William L. Woodin, Towanda, Pa., who has been long affiliated with the Comerford-Publix Theatres; his wife, Mrs. Larry Woodin and his aunt, Mrs. M. A. Kershner are still actively engaged in the motion picture business with aggregate lengths of service of 132 years.

Mrs. Kershner, believed to be the oldest active theatre cashier in the country, still handles the box-office at the Keystone Theatre, Towanda. She has been connected with show business since the turn of the century.

Others to be honored at the celebration include Allen and Linda Kershner, cousins of Larry Woodin and the following deceased members of the family; Mrs. William L. Woodin, Towanda, who spent 30 years in show business; Charles A. Woodin, Canton, Pa., who managed the Comerford-Publix Capitol at Maunk Chunk, Pa., at his death and Charles Allen, Larry Woodin's grandfather, who operated a nickelodeon at Towanda in the early days of the film business.

Beats Materials Shortage, Speeds Theatre Opening

Shortage of materials and other construction problems which delayed the opening of the Music Hall at Hot Springs, Ark., took a beating when H. S. McCord, secretary treasurer of the Malco circuit, which operates the 1250-seater, took off his coat and got to work.

The house, which opened recently with "Miss Susie Slagle's," is described by Malco President M. A. Lightman as the "finest . . . in our 80-house circuit." This despite the fact that the outfit had to delay a year in getting open because of critical shortage.

An example of how McCord used his head is found in one incident alone. Neither wood or metal was available for an ornamental stair rail. McCord procured light weight, flexible metal, bent and guided in the form he wished, fixed it to standards and then filled the pipe full of concrete which hardened to give a solid stair rail. Whole was then covered with velvet.

Don't Use Nails

In fastening displays to marquee roofs the constant use of nails very often causes leaks that cost considerable in time and money to repair. Carpenter's clamps, wiring and other methods can easily be substituted.

Prepare Summer Uniforms

Now is the time to get out the theatre's stock of summer uniforms, have them fitted to the present staff and then send them out to be cleaned to be ready for the summer.

Arrange Details of Spring Cleaning Now

All Sections of Theatre Should Be Renovated for Summer Months Operation

The advent of Spring usually brings to the experienced theatreman's mind the same thing that occurs to the housewife—the necessity of cleaning up the place! Although the housewife has a routine that includes taking down the curtains, taking up the rugs, making slip covers for and rearranging the furniture, etc., it differs little in essentials with the chores necessary in every well run theatre to bring the house to apple pie order.

What to do and when to do it to accomplish the desired result very often is laid out in a written order to the cleaning and maintenance crews by the theatre manager after consultation with the heads of various departments in the theatre. Very often the theatre manager makes a detaied tour of his theatre and requires the heads of his departments to accompany him. making notes on necessary changes and repairs as they go—and this procedure is advocated.

A start on this tour might take place on the roof to take stock of possible damage there. Water tanks, tank roofs, walkways, ladders and tank structures should be examined closely to see if any parts of covers or platform have been blown away during the winter months. Examination of the steel work, particularly any riveted joints, might show that rusting has been taking place undetected.

While still on the roof look over the portion of the upright sign visible from that angle. Overloading due to sleet, snow and rust may have damaged some of the supports or the sign itself. Also inspect the cornice and coping most carefully. Frost and moisture may have loosened tile or bricks.

Search for Leaks

While still outside, climb up atop the marquee to see if any leaks have been acquired during the winter. Maybe the supports are rusty. Then an inspection of the marquee letters will reveal just how dirty they have become due to smoke, dust or just inclement weather. By washing each letter in ammonia water the original sparkle will return. A new paint job on the metallic parts will help, too. The marquee renovation can be competed with a change in the lamps under it to give a new appearance. Change the lamps in the upright sign, too, for freshness.

An inspection of the entire front might reveal a need for a new paint job or at least painting repairs where chipping has occurred. If the theatre has a false front the composition board used must have deteriorated considerably during the winter months. Although this material is still in the hard-to-get class, an order placed now for the required kind and quantity will allow renovation to start just as soon as shortages ease. In any event a change in color is advocated.

While still out in front some thought might be given to the frames for the theatre's "now playing" attractions. The frames themselves, or the background boards, might be given new spring colors and designs.

Inside the lobby an inspection might show that set-pieces have been in the same locations all winter. Changing them to a different arrangement or building new ones will give the lobby an appearance of newness, of freshness. Lighting should be changed here, too, to spring and summer colors.

Before inspecting the inside of the theatre, look at the fire escapes to see whether or not rust has accumulated during the winter. If it has, a coat of red lead followed by a regular paint job will keep these necessary appurtenances in good condition to last through the summer. The outside of the exit doors may also reveal some rust and should be treated in the same manner—with red lead and paint.

If the theatre is so arranged that its rear or side is on an alleyway, a check might now be made to see that no obstructions or encumbrances are there. The alley should be completely cleaned—swept, if that is necessary, for good appearance.

Now a trip into the cellar. During the winter considerable rubbish may have accumulated (it shouldn't in a well regulated theatre) which should be removed and destroyed. The cellar should be thoroughly cleaned and whitewashed or painted, depending upon its finishing.

Next, a trip into the boiler room. If the procedure has been to place the boiler out of service during the warm weather it first should be flushed out and thoroughly cleaned. Gauge glasses, any automatic devices, oil burners, etc., should be overhauled and thoroughly checked.

There is some controversy about the method of handling the boiler for summer months, but most authorities recommend that it be left partially filled with water. If this is done it obviates the possibility of damage should some uninformed employe decide to burn rubbish rather than dispose of it otherwise. Heat without the water probably would cause cracking or other damage. Some insurance companies insist upon having a soda ash solution in the boiler, but this should not be done without consultation with the theatre's own insurance representative. Be guided by his advice.

Flues, stacks and the furnace itself should be thoroughly cleaned of all accumulations of dust, soot, etc. Neglecting this important phase of the spring cleaning job may result in moisture collecting, with heavy rust and corrosion to contend with when cooler weather returns.

Grates and itnerior surfaces of the boiler should be cleaned and inspected for necessary repairs. Cracks may have occurred in one or more sections during the winter and should be repaired with seaing compounds, and arrangements should be made to replace the repaired sections as soon as possible. Cracked, repaired sections cannot be depended upon for any length of time and may fail at a critical moment, causing plenty of grief.

Hot water might be supplied during the summer by a gas- or coal-heated device. In either case, an inspection of the water tank should be made to insure that it is in good condition. In the case of a gas heater, the burner should be inspected by a representative of the local gas company, with particular attention paid to the pilot light or other automatic device that starts the flame. Either the gas company man or a plumber should go over the heating coils to see that no leaks have occurred during the apparatus' disuse.

If the theatre manager has not, as part of his yearly routine, checked on the working condition of the theatre cooling system, this should be done without delay, preferably by an expert in the field. Because there still is a shortage of this type of inspection advice, immediate arrangements for an appointment will put the theatre at least on the waiting list.

Inside the theatre the usual cleaning chores should be a little more thorough than usual for the annual spring cleaning. The head of the cleaning crew should have its members pay particular attention to out-of-the-way places—behind the last row of seats, for instance. All drapes shoud be taken down for cleaning. Every single thing inside the theatre that can be cleaned—should be cleaned—and good!

With the advent of warmer weather the theatre doors should be opened and permitted to remain open until just before the first show to permit the circulation of good, clean air.

A check on all fire extinguishers will show whether or not new chemicals are necessary. This is a MUST in spring cleaning. When the extinguishers are refilled, tag each one with the date of refilling. Then check all other fire control apparatus.

As the days get longer and changes in time in various states possibly take place, it might be advisable to change the schedule a little—bring the feature on a little later to permit the spring planting in small garden plots to be done by the amateur gardener. Conditions in each locality will dictate the plausibility of this type of show alteration.

In addition to all of the suggestions made here, particularly if the theatre manager has issued a written order to department heads detailing just what is to be done, it is advisable for the theatre manager to take these department heads with him on another inspection tour to see for himself if his orders have been carried out completely.

The purpose of the second inspection is not particularly to catch anyone in a dereliction of his duty but for the manager to see for himself if any other changes are suggested when the ones already ordered, and presumably carried out, have been put into action, thus changing the picture of the theatre that was presented during the first inspection.

Spring cleaning is tough—nobody likes it very much, but it is a job that must be done in any well-regulated theatre.

MANAGERS' CHECK REMINDER

Lighting

- ☐ Where can you effect a savings on your light and power consumption? Are you satisfied that your front is being lighted at the proper time?
- ☐ Is lighting changed at appropriate times?
- ☐ Is there enough light in Auditorium?
- ☐ Do lamps operate at full brightness when full up?

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

Refresh Your Advertising Slants, Advises Jackson

the most expensive of your advertising mediums. If you don't make every word count and don't take the care and time necessary to present your message in the most attractive and convincing manner you're throwing away a good portion of the money expended.

Try to give added appeal to your trailer presentation. Try a colored overlay, flashing the footlights on and off, making some freakish sound, saying a few words over the P.A. system before or after its presentation or in some other manner letting the customers know every now and then that something special is in store for them.

Those advance displays around the theatre also can be given extra treatment that will strike the "something different" note that always commands forcible attention. Putting skidoo buttons in the light sockets, changing the color of the lights, using colored streamers and a fan to blow them across a spotlight or cutting off all the lights and using a spotlight and color wheel are just a few of the many ideas that will make the old displays seem new and cause that "second look" that sells tickets.

Offers Possibilities

The front offers so many possibilities for frequent change that variation is limited only by your own imagination—plus observation of what you see in the magazines and in the windows of other merchants. Try changing the color effect in the soffit; setting the attraction board letters in different sizes (if you happen to lack variety in sizes and style of letters an answer is as close as the nearest sign shop, because letters cut from wall board or plywood will do the job), lay in a stock of flags and streamers, buy a few color-wheel motors from the local juke box man, lay colored cellophane behind the glass panels, or use gelatine from the booth supplies. But keep trying in every possible manner to command attention to your theatre and let the observer know that things have—and constantly are being—changed at the establishment.

Don't get into the rut of taking it for granted that all your customer potential read the newspapers or come in touch with any of the other established week-to-week activities. Don't conclude that the hearty response to last week's stunt is any guarantee that the same procedure will continue to produce business on an extended holdover period.

It's far better that you drop an activity while interest is at its height and give it a return date some time later than to exhaust its possibilities and take a chance on boring even a few of your customers. Let the old maxim that governed the performance of stage headliners for years, "keep 'em hungry and wanting for more" be your guide in the handling of all special advertising campaign effort.

Because we handle highly perishable merchandise all too many of us excuse wastage of money and effort on the false premise that instant decision and quick action are essential to successful marketing in our business. Nothing could be further from the truth. Only in isolated cases do we play a feature that has not been booked well in advance and about which we already have no end of material and suggestions with which to prepare a selling campaign that will keep our money out of those "customer dry" wells. Of course it takes a mighty strong character to place both hands firmly against the edge of that Gin Rummy table and resolutely push one's self away. But, if you'll do it and spend some time in intensive study of the pictures scheduled for the week after next, and lay out your advertising accordingly, you'll be ahead more money than if you succeed in "blitzing" everybody in the club.

Don't overlook the billing route and those window locations. You can—and probably do—post a lot of your hard-earned grenebacks along with the lithos. Check the changes in bus routes, etc. If their work interferes with the attention value of your posting, stop the posting until the situation is corrected and the locations regain their desirability. And, try checking on your bill poster occasionally to see that the valuable boards are kept properly blanketed and neat in appearance.

How long has it been since you looked over the frames that hold your attraction cards in the hotel lobbies? Those frames should be cleaned up at frequent intervals and it's advisable to change their color background or design every now and then. The same goes for frames in other desirable locations. Nothing discourages public attention as quickly as sameness, dinginess and dirt. Why not take a few hours a week to visit with the store keepers who display your window cards. See if you can't prevail on them to give better space to your material. Explain the value of those colored repros of Grable's gams and the illustrations showing what Vivian Blaine and others have to offer as "something for the boys." Tell 'em how the bobby-soxers spend hours gazing at Van Johnson, How Fred MacMurray and Ray Milland are "topics of the times" at any and every "femme" gathering. Make them understand that those window cards possess the magic and magnetism of "glamor" and that they can be depended on to sell any merchandise displayed in their starry aura. Also, while you're about it, sell him on the idea of changing his backgrounds and the location of the cards at frequent intervals.

Look over those special displays that keep your art shop busy 'way into the wee small hours. Do the dollars you're spending on these carry the Circe lyre and the Siren lure that will entice its fellow dollars to haunt your box-office? I'll answer for you; very seldom! In the great majority of cases such displays, in order to be effective, are far too expensive to return theatre revenue commensurate with the outlay of cash and effort necessary to their completion. Except in the rare instances where you can get genuine gowns or other effects used in the film production and where the co-operator goes to great lengths to make the display attractive at his own expense, only a corporal's guard of the dollars sent out ever find their way back to the theatre. Such displays have possibilities of paying in theatre prestige but very, very rarely will their presence be evident on the daily box-office report.

Must Have a Cloud

Back in the days when business was hard to get, theatremen did a lot of brain-beating for cost-free methods of getting their attractions before an audience potential whose flattened pocket-books made attendance in any theatre a luxury. And, while we never had to dig out the ropes the effort went a long ways toward keeping the wolf from eating the carpets off the floors and the seat of the owner's pants intact. Today, with money as plentiful as OPA regulations, there is no need for such skimping. But, just as every cloud has a silver lining so must every silver lining have a cloud. All the silver lining has to do is to turn over—and there is plenty of evidence at hand to indicate that such a non-so-difficult maneuver may be imminent.

Those who are dissipating the largesse of the Gods of Plenty are certain to be among the first to be awarded the "failure diplomas" that will be handed out in bundles when the boom days are over. Take a check on your advertising expenditures Mr. Showman. From ten to twenty-five per cent of your receipts are being spent in this account column every week. Perhaps you can't reduce the budget but you can make every one of those dollars do a better job either by improving their present performances or putting them to work at new jobs and in different places.

PRC Finishes Picture, Sets Up Ambitious Release Schedule—"Crime in the Night," Sig Neufeld production featuring Hugh Beaumont and Cheryl Walker, finished this week. Although PRC production is now at a temporary lull, the company announced last week that eight films will be released during March and April. The films are: a second color outdoor action series release; "Gentlemen With Guns"; "Mask of Diijon"; "Murder Is My Business"; "Thunder Town"; "Devil Bat's Daughter"; "Caravan Trail" and "Wife of Monte Cristo."

The Philo Vance series has been turned over to Alexander-Stern Productions.

RKO RADIO Goes Strong on Production; Has Six Features Rolling—This studio is still out in front as far as activity on the sets is concerned. Disney is finishing his latest animated feature, "Make Mine Music," which includes a galaxy of big names. "Child of Divorce," exploitation picture, is also finishing, and "Desirable Woman," starring Joan Bennett, is apt to be completed shortly, having been shooting for 50 days. "Sinbad the Sailor," Technicolor special, moves into fourth week. "Criminal Court," featuring Tom Conway, Martha O'Driscoll, and Robert Armstrong, is in its second week before the lensmen.

Just starting is "What Nancy Wanted," a comedy-drama starring Brian Aherne, Laraine Day and Robert Mitchum. Bert Granet is producing and John Brahm directing. "What Nancy Wanted" gives RKO a record of six features currently before the cameras.

"A Likely Story," Bill Williams-Barbara Hale picture, finished this week, and goes into editing.

"Honeymoon" is having trouble because of Joseph Cotten's disapproval of his role. By the time this column appears, Cotten may have reconciled his differences, however, and the picture may get started.

Samuel Goldwyn is scheduled to start his big effort for RKO in two weeks. "The Best Years of Our Lives," formerly titled "Glory for Me," rolls April 1. Goldwyn is expected to start another film simultaneously, "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty," to star Danny Kaye.

MONOGRAM Continues Accelerated Production Tempo; Three Films Rolling—This studio is going strong, with three pictures before the cameras and two scheduled to start Monday. "Don't Gamble With Strangers," Jeffrey Bernerd production; "The Fighting Texan," Johnny Mack Brown western, and "High School Scandals," Teen-Age series production, are all being shot. This coming Monday finds the latest Cisco Kid starting, as yet untitled. Gilbert Roland is featured, with Martin Garralaga. Scott Dunlap produces. UNITED ARTISTS Production Setup Remains the Same, With Three Films in Work—This organization ought to be busier next month, with a number of its independent producers planning starts on films, but this week finds just three pictures shooting. They are "The Strange Woman," "Angel on My Shoulder," and "Mr. Ace and the Queen." "The Strange Woman" and "Angel" are both set to finish within the next two weeks, having had long tenures before the cameras. "Mr. Ace" is making up for time lost due to the extended illness of George Raft.

Buddy Rogers and Ralph Cohn still plan to make "Little Iodine," based on the King Features cartoon, as their first effort for Comet Productions. They have purchased a story concerning GI war brides from Bob Williams, which will be produced as "The Singing Village."

When Hedy LaMarr finishes her first independent venture, "The Strange Woman," with Hunt Stromberg, she will start preparing the next, "Dishonored Lady."

David O. Selznick is still putting the finishing touches to his four-hour production, "Duel in the Sun." Selznick signed Louis Jourdan, French film star, to a contract. Alfred Hitchcock, who will direct Jourdan's first American starrer, "The Paradine Case," is now working on the script with Alma Reville.

PARAMOUNT Shooting Four Films, With Two More Set to Go Next Week—This studio is more active than it has been in some time. Most recent starter is the Bing Crosby production, "Welcome Stranger," which has been shooting eight days.

Also shooting is "Perils of Pauline," a Technicolor film starring Betty Hutton. "Suddenly It's Spring" and "Perils" have both been shooting three weeks. The film that has been going the longest at Paramount is "O.S.S."

Scheduled to roll Monday are "Where There's Life" and "Seven Were Saved."

"California's" location crews are finishing their excursions into the state for scenic beauties to be shot as introductory footage to the picture.

COLUMBIA Still Behind Ordinary Shooting Tempo; Four Pictures Going—This studio remains somewhat behind in production, but is ahead of last week's schedule. "The Jolson Story" still rolls, with likelihood that it will establish some sort of record for time before the cameras. "Gallant Journey," Glenn Ford-Janet Blair starrer, is starting its third week. "Power

REPUBLIC Hits High for Production Activity; One of the Busiest Studios in Hollywood—Republic's stages are really humming these days, with five films going on the lot and one being produced outside. "My Pal, Trigger," latest Roy Rogers, is being finished, and is just about ready for editing. "Earl Carroll's Sketchbook" ends its second week before the cameras today, and "Rendezvous With Annie" is in its second week of production.

"Traffic in Crime" just started under the production guidance of William O'Sullivan. Another picture just starting is "Red River Renegades," a Sunset Carson Western, produced by Bennett Cohen.

Finished this week was "Santa Fe Uprising," first Red Ryder starring Allan Lane. Sidney Picker produced.

Winding up this week is "The Fabulous Suzanne," a Steve Sekely Production, which has been photographed on four different lots because of space difficulties. The cast includes Barbara Britton, Bill Henry and others.

WARNER BROS. Picks Up on Production, With Three Pictures Added to Shooting Schedule—Warner Bros., long dormant as far as normal production is concerned, this week is getting back to the usual tempo. Six films are rolling. These include "Humoresque," "The Sentence," "A Very Rich Man," "Stallion Road," "Cloak and Dagger" and "Cheyenne." The latter three are the most recent starters.

"Humoresque," now in its 81st day before the cameras, stars Joan Crawford and John Garfield. "The Sentence" is in its ninth week of shooting, and stars Ann Sheridan. "A Very Rich Man," featuring Sydney Greenstreet, has been rolling for 33 days.

"Stallion Road," being produced by Robert Buckner, is an adaptation of Stephen Longstreet's novel.

"Cheyenne," a Western drama, stars Humphrey Bogart and his wife, Lauren Bacall, with Ronald Reagan. Alex Gottlieb produces; James Kern directs.

Scheduled to start last week was the U. S. Pictures independent offering, "Cloak and Dagger," starring Gary Cooper. Fritz Lang directs.

Buckner, now producing "Stallion Road," may also have another picture on his hands soon when "Life With Father" gets under way.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER Remains Steady on Shooting, With Five Films Rolling—MGM continues much the same, with no appreciable pickup in production. Starves 'Em, Then Throws 'Flesh'

RKO Theatres Division Manager Harry Schreiber has no doubt of Cleveland's reaction to a combination stage show-pictures policy. Business was very big at the Palace when Vaughn Monroe and his orchestra played there last week; it is even bigger this week, with Ted Lewis heading the bill. Next week Peggy Ryan is expected to equal, if not top, the two previous weeks, and Guy Lombardo, who brings the month-long session of stage shows to a close, is always a record breaker.

Following the Lombardo engagement, the Palace will return to a straight pictures policy. Reason: to keep keen the public appetite for stage shows so famished patrons will pounce upon the Palace box-office to get their "pound of flesh" when the next stage attraction plays.

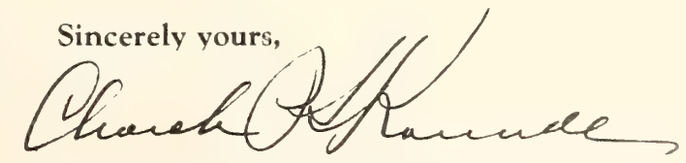
WHY A CANCER CAMPAIGN...

To 16,668 American Exhibitors:

For several years, we of the National Theatres Amusement Co., Inc. have been interested in doing something about cancer, America's No. 1 Enemy.

When the war ended and we were released from intensive wartime activities, the executives of our company—in a meeting at Kansas City—resolved to aid The American Cancer Society's 1946 campaign with every facility at our command.



Subsequently, The American Cancer Society asked us to help organize all the motion picture theatres of America in support of the drive. We advised these Cancer officials we could not speak for the entire industry, only for National Theatres.

However, we did agree to accept the responsibility of laying the appalling facts about cancer before all exhibitors, and to invite them to join us voluntarily in an Easter Week Drive, both to raise funds and to let the American people know there is hope for 17 million of them now marked for death.

This we are doing . . . and the response, already, has been inspiring.

Production, distribution and exhibition are rallying to the call of dire human need, joining all other industry, business, press, radio and the great community service organizations—TO DO SOMETHING ABOUT CANCER!

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES P. SKOURAS
Pres., National Theatres Amusement Co., Inc.

P.S. The invitation still stands. Someone, somewhere, will thank you for accepting.

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

Unusual Occupations (Good)

Para. (L5-3) 10 mins.

The workings of a food testing section of Consumers Institute shows how testers prepare food exactly in accordance with directions given in printed recipes. The scene then shifts to Cleveland where industrialists have created a typical 1885 city street with stores and displays of the period. On the beach at San Pedro, California, an entire family makes a comfortable and interesting living out of beach-combing. Fragile-looking young lady sculptress carves several-ton weights of granite into interesting figures. The reel concludes with exciting sequences of a spectacular mail route, via a rapids-running boat along the Snake River, Idaho. A lively short in color.

In the Postwar Era (Fair)

Para. (Y5-3) Speaking of Animals 9 mins.

This is a conglomeration of scenes showing how postwar inventions will affect the familiar barnyard animals. From a milking machine on a prize cow to a trio of goats singing what might be a radio commercial the short strives for comedy that doesn't quite come off as well as the high average achieved by previous shorts of the series. Just fair.

Popular Science No. 3 (Interesting)

Para. (J5-3) 10 mins.

This newest edition of the series shows the workings of intricate machinery that pits, skins, halves and otherwise prepares fruit for commercial use. Next, a series of scenes shows what can be expected in accommodations in the new type railroad sleeping car. The scene shifts to a heretofore secret laboratory where experiments on volunteer humans revealed how the services learned how to prevent blackouts of aviators in combat. Interesting addition to the average program. In color.

Rhythm on Blades (Excellent)

Para. (R5-6) Sportlights 9 mins.

This is a clear explanation of just what those leaps and bounds are, when ice skaters gyrate gracefully hither and yon. Everyone has seen figure-skaters doing their graceful stuff but few have known what they were doing, aside from the fact that it looked tough to do. Ted Husing's narration and the arrangement of logical sequences present a clear explanation of the technical aspects of the skater's art. Good for any program.

'Bunny' Display Sells Kiddie Show

With the realization that the patronage of children could be heightened and induced by extra special lobby display, which usually plays havoc on their imagination, Manager Sam Hebscher of Odeon's Nola Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, created just such an attractive display for the occasion of his Special All Cartoon Children's Matinee.

Glamor boy Bugs Bunny, with his flopping ears, was featured in a large cut-out form, but in place of his inevitable carrot, a cut-out bottle of Pepsi-Cola was used which delighted the children no end. As an added incentive, Hebscher gave away 30 six-bottle-cartons of the soft drink and 10 guest passes for the Saturday matinee.

The special display, which was set up in connection with advertising of regular attractions, caught the eye of everyone passing the theatre, and the show of course, was a sell-out.

My Man Jasper (Fair)

Para. (U5-2) Puppetoons 8 mins.

The Scarecrow dreams he is in a Robinson Crusoe setting, captured by the natives, in the well known cooking pot and being tried for his crimes by a jury, judge, prosecutor, court attendants, all of whom strangely resemble Jasper. The Scarecrow, stricken by conscience, awakens and returns Jasper's stolen belongings. The idea was swell, the animation excellent but the dialog is almost unintelligible, spoiling complete enjoyment of this Technicolor short.

In Dutch (Funny)

RKO (64,105) Disney Cartoons 7 mins.

Pluto blithely carries on with his job delivering milk to the townspeople when he meets the beauteous Dinah, who gets caught in the rope attached to the alarm bell designed to warn the people when the dike starts to leak. The duo are banished from the town but discover a real leak. Their warning is disregarded until Pluto's tricks make the people chase him to the spot where Dinah bravely is stopping the small hole. The two are acclaimed heroes, with Pluto taking up his old job and Dinah riding his cart with him. This Technicolor cartoon is a nice addition to any program.

High Blood Pressure (Fair)

Columbia (7433) Schilling & Lane 19 mins.

Gus Schilling and Richard Lane form a new team and play a screwball type of comedy, with Lane the smart-aleck, fast-talking guy and Schilling the long-suffering foil. They become involved with police in traffic violations, with doctors in a near surgical operation and a free-for-all in a baseball park. The team shows promise and could be really funny with better material.

Flicker Flashbacks No. 4 (Good)

RKO (64,204) 8 mins.

While similar to most of the other Flashbacks, this new release loses nothing in interest as it shows scenes from a Biograph production made in 1908 in which Emma and her straying husband go through what is known as "the gamut" in conveying their sufferings to audiences of that day. It is interesting and very funny at times. Good for any program.

Leon Errol started his 96th RKO Radio two-reel comedy recently.

Next Week... St. Louis

Many eyes will be turned in the direction of St. Louis on April 1st and 2nd when the first convention of the TAC takes place.

There is, in our opinion, a genuine and even an urgent need for a national organization of this kind. One that will deal with the legislative, and similar matters of concern to all exhibitors.

There are many who predict that if the original and basic reasons for TAC show promise and progress, the new organization may get into other exhibitor problems, too. This would be natural growth.

In the final analysis it is not a matter of what they do but, how they do it. Results are what the members of any exhibitor group are entitled to and what they expect.

The TAC has everything in its favor including the blessings of hundreds of independent exhibitors. If it fails to show the action and results expected it will have to be charged off as just another noble experiment.

For our part, we believe it will do a great job and we wish it and its proponents and supporters every success in their unselfish attempt to give the exhibitors of this country the best organization it ever had.

The 16-mm. Question

There has been a rising crescendo of inquiries regarding the so-called threat or invasion of the industry by the 16-mm. film.

Truthfully, we have spent endless time and energy trying to delve into the possibilities and potentialities of this as a genuine threat to the established motion picture exhibitor, but we must confess we haven't found it yet.

Home exhibition of 16-mm. motion pictures will always be a hobby and a pastime, although many of our acquaintance seem to tire of them after a few months and their projectors are stored away in the back of the closet.

Control of major product will always be the chief factor that will act as a deterrent to outsiders with ambitions of putting on local shows at a paid admission price. If all these can offer is short subjects and advertising reels, your customers will hardly make it a practice of patronizing them as a steady diet.

There will always be the occasional school shows or church shows. But here again if they cannot get anything better than old features and shorts, they won't be able to make any inroads into your box-office receipts.

The chief menace, if you want to call it that, is not a new one born of the 16-mm. threat. It is the old fly-by-nighters who hire the local hall or auditorium and put on a sex picture or anything else that will bring the suckers in to pay an admission.

Your chief threat is not 16 mm. (indeed this narrow-gauge film might well prove an important adjunct to the commercial theatre operations of established exhibitors who by means of it may set up shop in outlying districts for occasional shows.) The real threat is from the alert and progressive showmen in your own field.

Stepping Out

The new PRC outfit is showing a flair for showmanship of the go-get-'em type which is always a joy to behold if you are a showman yourself. So far as the studio output is concerned, PRC is stepping out, as evidenced by the latest picture to come out of the company's Hollywood plant. This is "The Wife of Monte Cristo," which begins with a good title and receives some smart drum-beating by the distribution forces headed by Harry Thomas.

PRC did not take any chances that the trade in the East might overlook the stepped-up production values the company has given "The Wife of Monte Cristo." Thomas and his home office sales and advertising executives put on a party that was gilt-edge in every respect this week in New York and in so doing gave added emphasis to the fact that with its newer product PRC is really stepping out.

Personality Plus

United Artists—we are not at all surprised to see by the papers—will renew its contract with Grad Sears as vice-president in charge of world-wide distribution. This business of ours is most certainly a personality game, so to say, and as an observer of people in picture business we, along with others by the thousands, naturally look upon Grad Sears as one of the persons who, in his individual makeup as well as his business ability and methods, is Personality-Plus.

Mail Film Deliveries a Break for Theatres

Film Handlers Strike in Detroit Had Darkened 61 Neighborhood Operations

Detroit's 61 neighborhood theatres were scheduled to reopen this week as film—shut off by a jurisdictional exchange fight between two AFL unions—began to move in rapidly by mail from exchanges outside the strike-locked area.

Earl Hudson, president of the United Detroit Theatres believed that the situation was in hand and said that the possibility of any more of Michigan's 700 theatres having to close was remote.

The bulk of the film now serving the houses reportedly is being flown by Chicago. Initially this plan ran into a jam when First Assistant Postmaster General Jesse M. Donaldson had ruled that the postoffice should not deliver the film because it would place the government in a position of taking sides in a labor dispute.

Donaldson's ruling caused some 200 reels of film to pile up in the Detroit postoffice until postal authorities in Washington reversed him and freed the film.

The strike broke out among Detroit's 130 film handlers when IATSE Local B25 called its employes out to enforce wage demands in part but principally to forestall an effort which B25 officials said was being made by Teamsters' Union Local 299 to absorb their union.

Both unions belong to the American Federation of Labor and B25 has represented the workers since the organization of back room employes.

Picket lines were thrown around the exchanges and offices of distributing companies, disrupting service and practically forcing a shut down in film row as far as active business was concerned.

As the strike continued, the picket lines were extended to downtown first run houses with pickets taking up their positions before the Downtown, Park and Adams Theatres. The neighborhood houses had been forced to shut down.

An appeal to the American Federation of Labor to straighten out the jurisdictional fight was thought to have been made by interested citizens and a reported attempt at mediation of the difficulty was thought to be under way.

(In New York Thursday, informed labor sources said that the strike in Detroit was unauthorized and that the teamsters' union would probably withdraw from the controversy.)

The Labor Situation This Week . . .

Detroit's backroom employe strike, which threatened to darken Michigan's 700 theatres, seemed slowing down as theatres received film by mail. The situation, however, still had ominous possibilities.

Motion Picture Association Vice-President Byron Price announced a plan for arbitration on all future jurisdictional disputes between AFL unions. It would submit any disagreements to discussion and bar strikes while the discussions are in effect.

New York White Collar CIO workers in home office front rooms agreed to ask for either $10 pay raises or $35 minimums in their discussions for new contracts.

Mediation in the New York RKO theatre managers controversy ended in failure. The union had previously authorized a strike call but had not set the date.

Pat Casey, chairman of the Producers' Labor Committee for 25 years will be succeeded by George Keller, former representatives of the Maritime Labor Committee when Casey's resignation takes effect.

Hollywood producers will start new contract discussions with the American Federation of Musicians on April 9.

Arbitration Plan for Jurisdictional Clashes

Byron Price this week announced from Hollywood that a tentative plan which would submit all jurisdictional labor disputes to arbitration and would prevent strikes during the period that arbitrators were studying the matter, had been worked out by the Motion Picture Association of America and representatives of the AFL unions on the coast.

The plan which has been turned over to the unions for further study will affect only jurisdictional disputes within the AFL. It will not cover disputes over wages, working conditions or other controversial subjects.

It calls for, in brief:

An agreement for a period of years (5 years was recommended).

A board consisting of one representative of all AFL unions in the studios.

An impartial referee hired by the unions.

Submission of all jurisdictional claims to the board. If that body is unable to reach a decision within 24 hours after a hearing is held, then the matter goes to the impartial arbiter.

No strikes or other work stoppage to be called while the matter is under arbitration.

Price was quoted as saying that the plan was a straight-forward approach to the jurisdictional problem and that in his discussion he had found union leaders in agreement that some sort of system had to be worked out to take care of jurisdictional issues.

Mediation Efforts Fail in RKO-Managers' Issue

Efforts of the New York State Mediation Board to settle the controversy between New York Theatres and the Motion Picture Theatre Operating Managers and Assistant Managers' Guild broke down during midweek as RKO reportedly persisted in its stand that it would not recognize conditions which the union says had been granted by the National Labor Relations Board.

Failure of mediation leaves the next move to the union, which has empowered its officials to call a strike. However at a late hour this week, no call had been issued. The union wants a 48-hour week, with salaries of $85 to $140 a week for managers and $40 to $75 a week for assistant managers.

Picket Theatre to Force Employment of Negroes

What were said to be San Diego Communists added a new twist to exhibitor problems and picketing this week as they picketed the Victory Theatre with a demand that Owner Leo Hamacher employ Negroes. Hamacher refused to "fire somebody to hire someone else."

The Victory's neighborhood is heavily populated by Negroes and Mexicans, and other establishments have been compelled to replace white employes with Negroes. Exhibitors fear the move may spread.

White Collar Workers Seek Minimum of $35 Per Week

New York's CIO White Collar workers who have the contract with the majors home offices for clerical help this week adopted 12 proposals which they will seek to have incorporated in their new contracts which will soon be negotiated.

They cover:

Pay raises of $10 a week or a minimum salary of $35 weekly; vacations, progressive raises after periods of services; non-discrimination.

Musicians-Studio Meet April 9

Talks for new contracts between the American Federation of Musicians and Hollywood producer's Representative George Keller, will start April 9 it was announced in New York this week.

W. F. ('Bill') Crockett

(The Man on the Cover)

The man behind the pen (or the typewriter) which inscribed the first draft of the proposed Theatre Activities Committee constitution to be presented at the organizational meeting of that movement in St. Louis on April 1-2. Showman Bill Crockett (baptized William Franklin Crockett) came into the theatre as an usher at the Norfolk, Va., Royal when he was 15. Later he went into the lumber business, got out of that to serve with the 20th Engineers in France during World War I for 18 months an dthen returned to become a lumberman once more. But the urge to return to show business was strong and once back in Virginia Beach, Va., he built the Roland Theatre in 1925, the Bayne Theatre in 1930 and consolidated with D. Pender in 1932 to form the Bayne Roland Corporation

Won't Censor School Films But Beer Parlors Beware

It's not the school kids' morals or good taste this time. It's the patrons of livelier places who might have their fine senses shocked if they saw the wrong thing.

Anyway, it was something of a relief in Detroit educational circles this week when the Police Department took time out of its incidental duties of traffic direction and crime control to say no, a thousand times no, that it did not intend to use its new authority of censorship over 16 mm. films to invade the classroom.

According to this information, action will be taken against dime in the slot movies, which like the juke box, seem to inhabit bistros and certain other popular and equally old establishments known to the history of all nations. And while the patrons of such establishments may not be made to blush by having the bumps thrown at them or take offense at a song of biological intent, children in the school room will not be prohibited from learning how and why Miss Positive Electron has such an attraction for Mr. Negative Electron. No more of this bird and bees and flowers business.

St. Louis MPTO Watches 16-mm. for Competition

Decision to watch the 16 mm. field carefully for possible competition through reissue of past-played product in that medium to educational institutions was agreed upon in St. Louis this week by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of St. Louis, eastern Missouri and southern Illinois.

The exhibitors acted after it was reported that Washington University of St. Louis was offering a season of such shows at 10 cents a show.

The MPTO also voted to send letters to its members advising them to attend the Theatre Activities Committee organization meet as personal observers to decide whether they wish to join as individuals. The MPTO as a body could not join TAC, the board decided.

Deny Motion to Alter Schine Divesture Rule

U. S. District Court Judge John Knight this week denied that motions to alter his decision in the Schine Theatres suit which orders the circuit to divest itself of houses in areas where at present it has no competition. Judge Knight did allow some amendments to his opinion which do not affect the case in particular. Schine is understood to be preparing an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

Consent in Brunet Case

Rene J. Brunet, operating the Imperial Theatre in New Orleans and 20th Century-Fox this week entered a consent decree in a recently filed arbitration case whereby Brunet will get 1946 and 1947 product 115 days after first downtown run. Past clearance had been 180 days and higher.

Smith Bans 'Game'

Atlanta city censor Christine Smith, who made the news with her ban on "Scarlet Street," was at it again this week, banning RKO's "Game of Death." Her decision was backed by the trustees of the Carnegie Library.

Friendly Appointment

Dan Friendly this week was appointed head of RKO's stage show department, RKO General Manager Sol A. Schwartz announced.

Boom On, But Turkey's Still Turkey

If it's a turkey it doesn't stay in the straw very long take the word from showmen on that.

Strangest result of a check on the motion picture business, its volume, its likes and dislikes, conducted by correspondents of the SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW in all key centers, reveals that while audiences jam theatres and at present are offering a seating problem, they seem to have become more discriminating in what they want to see.

They do not, the survey shows, go to the movies just to be going to the movies, but they go when there is a picture they wish to see. A bad film today will fail just as badly at the box-office as it did in the past, the sum total of the reports show. It's only the better product which is getting the big returns, and since releases within the past 75 days have tended toward strong box-office they have gotten strong results.

Another trend which showmen claim to have noticed is an absence of trends in audience taste. Any picture that offers entertainment is well received and while westerns together with the chill and chatter dramas continue to have their special audience, motion picture audiences generally will turn out for pictures as widely separated as "The Lost Week End" and "The Harvey Girls."

United Exhibitor Front Missing As Hope For U. S. Tax Repeal Fades

Organized national exhibitor effort to persuade Congress to repeal the 20 per cent admission tax which last year brought approximately $384,000,000 into the Treasury, was conspicuously absent from the Washington scene this week as members of both Houses seemed to regard retention of the levy a foregone conclusion.

Informed sources said that not only would the Department of Internal Revenue oppose any further cuts in tax appropriations on the ground that all possible income was needed for a sound Treasury operation, but that legislators were inclined to look upon the admissions tax as one laid upon pleasure and one that could easily be paid by the public.

Representative Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.), chairman of the influential House Ways and Means Committee, declared that in his opinion no action to eliminate or reduce the theatre tax would be considered by his group.

"Certainly," Doughton said, "no reduction can be made in pleasure taxes considering the poor shape of the Treasury. . . People who think that there is a chance for a rapid reduction of the excise tax are on uncertain ground."

He added that the government needed every cent of revenue it could get.

Doughton's view on retention of the tax, echoed by other Congressmen, seemed to be re-echoed by the exhibitors if their actions spoke louder than their words. Outside of Allied States, no active organization for repeal has been noticed on Capitol Hill. Allied is fighting for abolition of the tax but observers point out that a successful tax-repeal movement today has to line up an industry solidly behind it.

Declaring that last year the levy brought some $384,000,000 from the box-offices of the country to the Treasury, one observer said he thought the tax deserved a much stiffer fight than it got.

"Last year's foreign market only brought in about $70,000,000, (which is less than one-fifth of the amount taken out of the domestic market by the tax) and yet the industry is apparently bending every effort to expand that market—an increasingly hard job since foreign production is steadily going much stronger.

"That admission tax is actually taking money out of the box-office either in keeping admissions down where they should be a bit higher or in reducing the audience's purchasing power for more films. Of course the exhibitors in the main may be actuated by patriotic motives in not wishing to fight a tax when the country needs the money. They may be a bit embarrassed to ask for a tax repeal when most situations are making money. But it is still a big sum to pay in taxes and deserves some sort of united front."

'Ghost' Theatres?

A warning that reckless construction of theatres after lifting of building restrictions might result in "Ghost" theatres without patrons was voiced in Indianapolis this week by the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana weekly bulletin, which reminds readers that after the 1929 crash many of the largest theatres of Indiana went into receivership.

It also warns exhibitors to enforce the state "no smoking" law which it says is now being violated.

Paramount Announces 23 For Remainder of '46

Twenty-three pictures, said to be the most complete long range release schedule in Paramount's history, were announced for the remainder of 1946 in Hollywood this week by Distribution Vice-President Charles M. Reagan and Studio Operations Vice-President Henry Ginsberg.

The 23 pictures: "Road to Utopia," "Kitty," "The Virginian" (Technicolor), "The Blue Dahlia," "They Made Me a Killer," "The Well Groomed Bride," "The Bride Wore Boots," "Our Hearts Were Growing Up," "Hot Cargo," "To Each His Own," "O.S.S.," "The Searching Wind," "Swamp Fire," "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers," "Monsieur Beaucaire," "Blue Skies" (Technicolor), "Cross My Heart," "The Perfect Marriage," "Big Town," "Two Years Before the Mast," "Ladies' Man," "The Trouble with Women" and "Welcome Stranger."

Anti-Daylight Time Voters May Seek Referendum

Daylight Saving Time opponents in St. Louis were reportedly mulling over plans this week to take the question of advancing the clocks to the people by way of a referendum.

The ordinance passed the necessary authority and the new time will go into effect April 28 until the last Sunday in September.

At Belleville, Ill., the city council also voted to adopt the same time schedule as St. Louis and in DuQuoin, Ill., the Chamber of Commerce sent a resolution to Governor Dwight Green and Mayor Arthur F. Angel recommending the changed time.

THE PERSONAL SLANT

Five Paramount employes are scheduled to take part in the photographic work connected with "Operation Crossroads," the Pacific atom bomb test to take place in May. Four of the five—Sound Mixer Gene Garvin, and Film Editors Thomas Scott, Floyd Knudtson, Stanley Johnson, have been granted leave of absence at the request of the government. The fifth, Sanford Greenwald, a former lieutenant colonel in charge of a combat camera crew with the Ninth Air Force in Africa and Europe, will join the newsreel pool.

MGM home office executives were coming and going again this week with Eastern Sales Manager E. K. O'Shea in Hot Springs, Ark., for a vacation and Exhibitor Relations Head H. M. Richey back from one at Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

Renew Sears Contract

A new five year contract continuing the services of Gradwell L. The contract was concluded between Sears and UA President Edward C. Raftery late this week.

Man Bites Dog

A dog biting a man is no longer news. But when 48 grade school kids come to the defense of their censor as they did in Peabody Grade School this week in a letter thanking Memphis Censor Chairman Lloyd T. Binford for protecting them against the bad influences of crime pictures . . . well . . . that's . . . you figure it out.

Binford, who has been under the editorial fire of both the Commercial Appeal and the Press Scimitar, recently suggested unofficially that the Lena Horne sequences of "Ziegfeld Follies of 1946" be deleted. He had previously taken the same "unofficial action" against some Rochester scenes in "The Sailor Takes a Wife."

Acquires Full Ownership Of Western Mass. Chain

Samuel Goldstein this week became the sole owner of all Class A stock in the Western Massachusetts Theatres, New England chain with houses in 9 centers, by purchasing the interest of Nathan E. Goldstein, who is retiring from the corporation.

Goldstein, who started his working career as a 50-cent a day copy boy for a newspaper, entered show business by introducing the first silent pictures in the area his theatres now occupy. No changes of personnel were reported contemplated, Goldstein announced, and Harry Smith would remain as circuit manager.

Nathan Goldstein, who sold his theatre interests, bought out Sam Goldstein's share of the Springfield real estate corporation both had owned together.

Western Massachusetts operates in Holyoke, Chicopee, Westfield, Norhtampton, Greenfield, North Adams, Pittsfield, Springfield and Battleboro.

Italy Seeks World Mart As U. S. Bids for Quota

Italy succeeded in turning out 54 films since June, 1944, despite the difficulties attending motion picture production in that nation, and is now making a bid for a foreign market, especially in France, according to dispatches received in New York this week.

The Italian move to get into the French market was thought to be held up slightly because the French were said to be demanding the right to ship 50 films into Italy on a reciprocal deal and Italians now are trying to keep foreign imports down so as to give the native production industry a chance.

While the Italians were dickering with the French, American producers were said to be continuing their talks on a reciprocal deal which would allow American product to enter Italy.

The New York Times reported that the Italian newspaper Globo had declared that an agreement thought to have been reached with the Americans which would allow each of the participating firms to import 16 pictures a year had been rejected by the home offices in New York as too low. The companies involved were said to be MGM, Paramount, United Artists, Warner Bros., RKO, Columbia, Universal, United Artists and 20th Century-Fox. Globo further said that the conferences therefore would have to be resumed.

(In New York, a representative of the Johnston office would not amplify on the situation and refused to comment beyond saying that the matter "is a subject of discussion."

It could not be learned either whether the original discussion was centered around allowing each of the companies a yearly import of 16 pictures into Italy regardless of the size of the company's output, and whether if this were so, it was not one of the stumbling blocks to final approval.)

Won't Stop U. S. Films For Exchange Reasons

Declaring that he did not see "why the pleasures of the people should be interfered with," Exchequer Chancellor Hugh Dalton told the House of Commons in London this week that he did not plan to stop American motion picture imports.

Dalton's statement came as an answer to a question of whether the payment of film rentals to the United States was not further tightening Britain's already difficult exchange position. He had told the House that these rentals for the period of September, 1939 to Jan. 31, 1946, averaged $330,400,000. Dalton's remarks applied only to possible banning or cutting of American product on the trade balance basis between the nations. It has nothing to do with contemplated moves to increase playing time of British independent product.

Laudy Lawrence Heads New U. S. Korda Unit

London Film Productions, Inc., Sir Alexander Korda's newly formed organization to represent his interests in America, will open offices under President Laudy Lawrence in the Empire State Building on April 1, it was announced this week.

The company will handle not only arrangements for distribution of Korda and affiliated product but will also arrange star package deals and engage other production talent for Korda's London studios.

Directors of the new company are: Korda, chairman of the board; Arnold Grant, general counsel; Morris Helprin, American production executive, and Lawrence, former MGM European head, president.

Assail Demon Rum in Movies

Use of liquor in motion pictures was criticized by the WCTU in Columbus, Ohio, and by the Baptists of Canada this week.

In Columbus the WCTU passed a resolution urging closer censorship of motion picture to eliminate the "promotion of drinking and the depicting of low standards of morals."

In Toronto, the Rev. H. H. Bingham, secretary to the Baptist convention of Quebec-Toronto, called for a protest of drinking scenes and said: "It would seem as though there is some sinister motive in bringing drinking scenes into every film."

Plagiarism, a Big Word to Many, Proves a Big Headache to Hollywood

By JAY GOLDBERG

Hollywood Bureau, SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW

Plagiarism is a big word on some folks' books. To the motion picture industry it's a big headache.

When Harold Lloyd recently filed a plagiarism suit against Universal, it marked what seems to be almost a continual performance of suits that has cost the industry well into the millions of dollars during the past quarter century.

Lawyers are sensitive in talking about the subject—sensitive and properly technical. They differentiate between plagiarism and piracy and other legal entanglements. However, whatever the name, it still is expensive.

It cost a studio anywhere from $5,000 to $25,000 just to defend a plagiarism suit, and if the litigation backfires, the judgment is often very high. Plagiarism cases are difficult for the plaintiff to win, but if and when he does, the matter is likely to be adjudged at as much as a hundred thousand dollars or more.

Many people about to sue the studio for allegedly stealing their material are stopped by the thought of the length of time it will take to get a judgment, and still others are halted by a studio ready to settle outside of court. Such surreptitious conferences are naturally not recorded in law journals, but one may assume that plenty has been paid out in this way.

At the present time, besides the Lloyd suit, Frank Capra is in the courts with a demand from Columbia Pictures for $2 million, which he claims is his share of the profits from "A Song to Remember." Strictly speaking, this is not a plagiarism suit. Capra, who says he is entitled to 25 per cent of the profits, asserts that he worked on the story treatment and production details.

Another suit in process now is that by Kitti Frengs against David O. Selznick's Vanguard Productions. Miss Frengs is not suing strictly for plagiarism, but for slander of title and libel. Her case has attracted wide attention because the Screen Writers Guild has mobilized strongly behind her, with James Cain, famous novelist and scenarist, in the lead. The writers are threatening an upheaval of the present system of payment and recongnition.

Just for the record, SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW publishes the definition of plagiarism as handed down by the U. S. Supreme Court. "Plagiarism must be something which ordinary observation would recognize as having been taken from the work of another and not by fine analysis or dissection by an expert . . . but a plot or mere concept around which to build and develop literary adornment is not copyrightable."

In other words, no one has monopoly on ideas, according to the Court ,and there are no bases for a plagiarism suit if several others happen to have the same idea.

Out After Jim Crow

St. Louis' CIO Industrial Council this week went on record as joining the Race Relations Commission in its efforts to get motion picture theatre owners to lift restrictions against Negroes wishing to attend shows.

Several St. Louis theatres operate exclusively for Negroes and a few suburban houses in a mixed population area admit them to certain sections of the houses.

Says Industry Deserves State Department's Aid

More American pictures for foreign distribution which reflect American life and democracy and a greater production of documentaries were urged in Washington this week by Assistant Secretary of State William Benton, who asserted that the department would support the industry in its efforts to enter the foreign field.

"No industry," Benton said, stressing the importance of motion pictures, "has a more legitimate right to get state department help in expanding its business abroad than the motion picture industry."

The Assistant Secretary then asked that the industry continue to furnish shorts and newsreels to the State Department embassies and missions for distribution where there is no U. S. distribution set up. He said that there would be no competition by the State Department and that such action was good "promotion."

"Over a period of time," he continued, "I hope that producers of entertainment pictures will learn how to make and successfully sell a higher percentage of films which depend more on a true portrayal of the American way of life and the democratic process. I also hope the industry will learn how to make documentaries and shorts which portray the life, customs, government and habits of the people of the United States. Because there has been no real money in documentaries and because distribution techniques have not been developed, the industry chose to ignore the documentary field."

Foreign Film Contracts Canceled in Singapore

Cancellation of all contracts made for exhibition of films in Singapore since Sept. 5 came in a swift and surprising move this week as authority there proclaimed a new quota for motion pictures.

The new quota requires that more than 10 per cent of a screen's playing time be given to British product and prohibits entry of any new contracts for exhibition of foreign films during the next six months.

The move was something of a mystery and the Johnston office and no information available. Film company executives had little information other than brief cables from their representatives and could not say whether or not the order was issued by the military at Singapore.

'24-Hour' Club Honors Spur Action in Current Red Cross Theatre Drive

Ready hearts and helping hands made a strong winning team this week as the majority of the theatres in the United States and all branches of the motion picture industry worked together to help put over the industry's Red Cross Drive.

All sections of the country reported intense activity, with Campaign Director Harold J. Fitzgerald announcing that the incentive of membership in the "24-hour" club, to consist of record shattering exhibitors and film salesmen who are to call upon President Truman to receive the chief executive's thanks, was causing workers to put in "overtime."

Fitzgerald said he had noted that theatres in several cities were extending the drive beyond the fixed dates.

Reports from the nation were:

BUFFALO—All theatres in this territory were in the drive, Chairman Robert T. Murphy announced. Credit was given Distributor Al Herman and his brigade of film salesmen for lining up the theatres.

CHICAGO—Co-chairmen Jack Kirsch and James E. Coston stepped out of the industry bounds and sold the legitimate theatres on the idea of collections in this area.

NEW YORK—Sixteen first run Broadway houses extended the Red Cross collection week by extra days, Chairmen Irving Lesser and Monty Salmon announced.

MEMPHIS—Chairman M. A. Lightman reported that the territory would be pledged 100 per cent to participation.

SAN FRANCISCO—More than 100 Golden State and T&D Jr., Enterprises have agreed to double their audience collections, Co-chairmen Richard Spier and Ray Cooper announced.

CLEVELAND—A tie-in between Red Cross workers and the theatres which are taking up collections was announced by Exhibitor Chairman Meyer Fine. Eighty-six per cent of the territory's theatres are in the drive.

LOUISVILLE—Approximately 90 per cent of the theatres in this territory are pledged, Exhibitor Chairman Sam Switow announced.

KANSAS CITY—The prairie territory expected to beat last year's record as approximately 450 theatres in the territory are cooperating, Chairman Lon Cox said.

MILWAUKEE—Veterans of World War II with overseas hospital records, have joined Red Cross workers in making this territory's collections. The vets are making personal appeals from the stage while the workers pass the can.

LOS ANGELES—Preview of "The People's Choice" with proceeds going to the Red Cross drive started the campaign off here, Co-chairmen Gus Metzger and R. H. Poole stated. The territory, according to Distributor Chairman Harry Cohen is 95 per cent lined up.

Building Boom to Ease Hollywood Studio Jam

The 16mm. market will temporarily play an important part in the commercial foreign field, Arnold Pressburger, Regency head and producer of the United Artists release, "A Scandal in Paris" told the trade press in New York this week.

Pressburger, who declared that "no picture of quality could be made for less than a million dollars," cited increased production costs, believed 50 per cent of next year's product would be in color, and predicted an end of the studio space shortage in six months due to a contemplated building program which he said he thought could be carried out.

A large number of motion picture theatres in France, in India and in the Orient, he said, use 16mm. equipment and will have to use it until it can be replaced with 35mm. equipment.

He was not optimistic of the possibilities of New York as a production center. "It," he said, "depends upon the facilities—a lone wolf can't do anything."

Speaking of increased costs and delayed schedules, he said shooting time now took six months to a year. "Where you paid casts $150,000, it now costs you $300,000. Instead of 45 days shooting, it now takes 60 days."

British Act to Stop Alleged Film Monopoly

Britain this week had moved through the House of Commons to study the question of more playing time for independently-produced British films on English screens which are supposedly dominated by J. Arthur Rank and his associates.

Announcement of a board to insure that the smaller British producer could get a playing break was announced in the House of Commons by Board of Trade President Sir Stafford Cripps. The board would probably consist of non-industry as well as industry representatives.

Theatre Tele Waiting On Canadian Approval

That Famous Players Canadian Corporation is ready to put television entertainment in its theatres as soon as the Canadian Government allots wave lengths was claimed in Toronto this week by President J. J. Fitzgibbons, who said Famous Players would not build any planned theatres until the Canadian housing situation has eased. He added that F. P. houses would launch a campaign to collect clothing and food for destitute sections of Europe.

Columbia Common to Pay 2½%

Columbia's Board of Directors authorized payment on May 9 of a two and a half per cent dividend on its common stock to stockholders of record as of April 24, 1946.

Air Show Starts Drive

A radio show to be broadcast on a national network will launch the Cancer Week drive in which motion picture theatres will participate. The drive, to start April 21, will have its official public unveiling at the radio show to be broadcast from Carnegie Hall, New York, on the evening of April 19. Stars from coast to coast will participate in the broadcast, production and presentation arrangements for which are to be handled by Carl W. Erbe and Bernard Kamber, special events co-chairmen for the campaign.

Shorts Strive to Hold Own; Duals in Slight Gain

Shorts are plodding along in the amusement field, holding their own, and in some cases making slight and almost negligible gains as double features continue to be strong and even in some territories to spread slightly, a survey of the industry this week revealed.

The dual situation shows no appreciable change, with the fact that double for the money seems to appeal to many managers if not all audiences. The value of names for the marquee, which features can offer and shorts often do not, seems in some measure to be responsible for this.

The dual gain is chiefly in the south where there has been some spread in the Atlanta, Dallas and New Orleans territories, where little if any doubling had been known several years ago.

ANFA Lists 50-Odd 16 mm Non-Theatrical Producers

There are more than 50 companies producing 16-mm. non-theatrical motion pictures in the United States, with over 30 wholesale sources of supply and a total of more than 350 film libraries maintained by commercial and educational organizations, according to listings in the 1946 Year Book published by Allied Non-Theatrical Film Association, Inc.

The 1946 Year Book is the first to be published by the organization which was founded in 1939.

The book, which contains 108 pages, presents articles on copyright, the use of motion pictures in Army training, film libraries, home movies, application of motion pictures to education, as well as articles on technical subjects, and lists of equipment manufacturers, etc.

Seek 6-Day Deliveries

Discussions with exchanges in the New York-New Jersey territory to see if a return to six-day film deliveries could not be accomplished were approved by Allied Theatre Owners of New Jersey, Inc., at their meeting this week in Passaic, N. J.

Allied was said to believe that a six-day delivery would benefit exhibitors, especially those with Saturday midnight shows and that exchanges would consider the idea favorably. Shortage of delivery firm equipment was considered the principal drawback.

D.S.T. for 7 Pa. Towns

Seven Pennsylvania cities — Philadelphia, Coatesville, Indiana, Stroudsburg, Erie, Harrisburg and Brockway—will go Daylight Saving Time with the possibility that some 50 odd more may swing that way shortly, reports from Philadelphia said this week. Cities rejecting the time were Altoona, Coaldale, Hopewell, Lewisburg, Martinsburg, Muncy, Roaring Spring and Westfield.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

M & R Theatres Start Better Business Drive

The first drive since the war for increased theatre business to be conducted by Manta & Rose Theatres in Indiana and Illinois has been called "On Your Own—1946 Reconversion Drive," based on the theory that every manager and district manager in the company's employ knows more about the operation of his own theatre than the home office headquarters could know. Therefore, headquarters wisely has decided not to dictate the conditions or activities to be covered by competing managers other than in a general way. The only thing they are interested in is better business, including candy and popcorn sales, decreased operating costs, decreased inventory of saleable items and clean theatres.

Things that will be considered in judging money prize winners have been listed to include "quality of newspaper ads, quality of general copy, Kiddie Club activities, civic tieups, general exploitation in all of its forms, costless co-ops of various kinds, institutional copy, street ballyhoos, real window displays, etc." Beyond this general indication of what will be considered, the managers are on their own.

Additional money prizes will be given on a "surprise" basis to one manager of the circuit who may or may not win one of the regular money prizes. This will go to the manager who has been judged to have given the greatest effort and zeal during the run of the contest.

Another, perhaps as important as any prize in the drive, is called "House Inspection Prize," and amounts to a healthy sum to be given to the cleaning crew of the theatre adjudged most efficient at putting and keeping a theatre in condition.

The drive, which started March 3rd, runs through June 1st.

4-H Club Fashion Shows Great Exploitation Stunt

Exhibitors whose theatres are located in 4H Club areas can take a tip from Jake Weber, Schine's Theatres group manager for Mohawk Valley towns. In a tieup with the 4-H Clubs in Herkimer, Little Falls and Ilion, N. Y., Weber put on a fashion show, using 40 4-H girls as models.

The female supervisor of 4-H activities acted as narrator and arranged the show for presentation, and the local papers went all-out on publicity and advertising. The models came from every hamlet in the county and that in itself was enough to insure capacity houses, plus the free exploitation by newspapers, 4-H Club bulletins and word-of-mouth.

Keep Your Screen Clean

How long has it been since your screen was cleaned? In a comparatively short time much dust can accumulate, not only filling the holes and impairing the sound reproduction but also lessening the brightness of screen projection. Arrange to have your screen inspected and cleaned at periodic intervals.

Repair Stair Carpets

Thread-bare carpets on stair risings should be repaired immediately. There is the possibility that a patron might catch his foot in the loose strands and fall, thus injuring himself and placing the theatre in jeopardy of a damage suit.

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

USHERS—AMBASSADORS OF GOODWILL

By Jack Jackson

An expert is quoted in this article dealing with the ways and means by which the usher and other members of the house staff may contribute most importantly to the success of a theatre and also win for themselves a continuing growth to higher, more responsible and very well-paying position in the film industry. There is material here for use, by quotation or reprinting, at theatres everywhere that good service is promised and performed for the public in accordance with the principles of successful operation.

This is the kind of a story I get a genuine "kick" out of writing. First, because it revives my childhood faith in Horatio Alger's "strive and succeed" formula; second, because it offers still another instance of concrete evidence to support the oft-repeated contention of myself and so many, many others to the effect that there is room on the high platforms of theatre business for the bottom-rung starters who "have the stuff"; and last, but by no means least, because it enables me to dodge the mental callisthenics usually asociated with this kind of work and simply jot down what the other fellow thought up.

The real author of this article is a chap named Lynn Harris, personal secretary to Karl Hoblitzelle, president of Interstate Theatres. Lynn brain-fathered a service manual for the guidance of Interstate's service personnel that outlines a character-conduct-courtesy code that deserves to serve as a model for theatre employes everywhere. The suggestions and recommendations offered here are not abstractions nor theories but are conclusions based on logic and practical experience in every phase of the subject. They are the analytical observations of a post-graduate who has scrutinized and reflects upon the methods employed by others doing work at which the observer has himself outstandingly proficient.

Lynn Harris started with the Interstate Theatres at the age of 14 as a part-time usher. He came up through all of the usual positions of usher, ass't chief, doorman, chief of service, ass't treasurer, treasurer, ass't manager. He did have the advantage of working under some of the best managers in the business, including, John Thoma, John C. Smith, Paul Short and the late Ed Sullivan, whom many will remember as having been Chester Stoddard's man-Friday in the days when Stoddard and Sullivan were entrusted with the job of training all the excellent service staffs of Paramount-Publix Theatres.

From the service department he went into short subjects under Besa Short; did a brief stretch in the display art shop and then took over his present post; which he has occupied for some years with time out to lend Uncle Sam a hand during the recent war.

The following are excerpts from Harris' service manual:

"The opportunities of the young man who selects theatre business as his career are limited only by the size and scope of this vast industry."

"An usher is not a servant. He is a student of an honorable and respected profession. Unlike most lines of endeavor, the theatre business cannot be learned from text books or a classroom. Only be actual experiences and by diligent attention to these experiences and their results, can a candidate equip himself for a successful career as a showman. Thus the novice must regard the period spent as a member of the service staff as a necessary and valuable period of schooling during which he daily adds to his store of knowledge of the fundamentals of show business.

"An usher is not a uniformed robot whose only duty is to show patrons to their seats. He is the host of the theatre—directly responsible for the comfort and safety of the patrons in his assigned section as well as their uninterrupted enjoyment of the program. And finally, he is responsible for the patrons leaving the theatre with the intention of returning to enjoy following programs.

"An usher is the personal representative of his theatre and of his chosen business. It is his duty to familiarize himself with the coming attractions and to have a conversational knowledge of all departments of the theatre from the engine room to the booth. Bearing in mind that he is a personal representative of his company, the usher must understand that although no attempt is made to regulate his private life away from the theatre, his actions must in no way reflect unfavorably upon the institution.

"The entire organization of the theatre stands behind the usher in the performance of his duty. The bookers, manager, publicity man, projectionists, porters, engineers, stage hands, etc., are all combining their efforts to see that the usher is in a position to greet the patrons with confidence in his ability to see that 'his' guests are entertained well and comfortably.

"To the public the usher is the most important member of the theatre's personnel because he is the only member of the theatre staff who actually makes contact with the patron. In this, the public is right, since the combined efforts of all other departments are wasted if the duties of the usher are not performed diplomatically, thoughtfully and smartly. It is the usher's conduct in handling each patron that is responsible for the opinion each patron forms of the theatre.

"The first requirements of good service (in any theatre, anywhere regardless of size or patronage pattern) are pleasing appearance, a friendly alert manner, a helpful attitude and personal cleanliness. Uniforms should be well pressed, shoes shined, hair neatly groomed, linen fresh, nails clean and any metal buttons or appendages shined. Perspiration odor and offensive breath must be guarded against.

"A pleasant facial expression is necessary—a mechanical smile is not encouraged—but the expression should be natural, never 'forced.' Posture should be consciously erect without being stiffly formal or miltary. The voice should be pleasant and well modulated. Always walk facing the direction of movement so as to avoid bumping into patrons. Pace should be brisk and businesslike yet unhurried, Never run. Never snap fingers or click heels to attract the attention of another employe.

"No member of the service staff should enter into prolonged conversation with patrons. Acknowledge the greeting of friends entering the theatre but do not encourage them to stand and talk. If conversation is necessary with another employe, it should be short and limited to the business at hand.

"Courteous treatment of all patrons is the first duty of the service personnel. All questions should be answered politely and intelligently and if the patrons complaint or query cannot be readily attended he should be escorted to the presence of an executive. Never argue with a patron. If a patron in the vicinity of your post appears to be confused or looking for something, step up to him, smile and ask if you may be of assistance. Many theatre patrons hesitate to approach members of the service staff for information and, very often, this is due to an uninviting attitude. Try to anticipate the desires of patrons and graciously solicit their inquiries and demands for your services.

"In the dressing room service staff members are expected to conduct themselves as though they were in their own homes. The room must be kept clean, uniforms hung properly and not thrown over the backs of chairs or on top of lockers. The property of others must be left alone. Towels, shaving materials and other supplies must be kept in their proper places.

"While on duty, the members of the service staff should listen attentively to instructions and carry them out promptly to the best of their ability without argument. While off duty in the theatre, service staff members should conduct themselves as patrons, avoiding conversation with working employes and at all times recognizing their responsibility to maintain the prestige and reputation so painstakingly built up by the theatre.

"All members of the service staff should make themselves thoroughly familiar with the physical makeup of the theatre. They should first learn the location of telephone booths, rest rooms, water fountains and the offices of executive personnel so that patrons may be properly directed.

"It is extremely important that the locations of all exits be memorized and that the stations of fire extinguishers be noted. It is also desirable that they know the location of the engine room, porter's locker, projection booth, supply rooms and electric switch panels. By all means acquaint yourselves with the name of the manager, his assistant, and other executives about whom inquiry is liable to be made. The floor plan of the auditorium should be memorized. Find out all possible information about your theatre, not only for you own convenience in carrying out your allotted duties but to enable the ready and intelligent answering of patron queries.

"Politeness is a prime requisite whether with fellow workers or the ticket-buying public. Always address one another with the prefix, 'Mr.' 'Mrs.' or 'Miss.' Never use first names while on duty. When approaching a patron to make a request or ask a question, begin the converation with 'I beg your pardon.' At the conclusion, say, 'Thank you, Sir' (or Ma'm.)

"When it is necessary to speak to a party, the following should always be observed: If to a man and woman, direct your conversation to the man. If to two or more women, address the elder. The same applies to two or more men. If a large party is to be addressed, try to ascertain which is the host and direct your conversation to him or her.

"Never tell a patron that they HAVE to do any certain thing. 'I beg your pardon but it is necessary that we keep the aisles clear due to fire ordinances,' 'The smoking conveniences are in the lounge' etc., etc. will get far better results than a brusque 'You'll have to step out of the aisle,' or 'No smoking here.' It is entirely proper to use a tone of polite authority but never a demanding tone'."

There is much, much more in the way of important instruction to service staff employes in Harris' manual and I will try to condense his suggestions for special service, diplomatic handling of difficult situations and other thoughts and ideas calculated to help other fellows to climb the ladder that Harris negotiated so successfully. I believe all this information of value and well worth passing along to the many newcomers who have entered the show world during the war years and find themselves wanting to make it their life career.

When it is taken into consideration that the great majority of the top executives of the motion picture industry have themselves risen from the ranks it is not hard to conclude that they will all agree with the premise that basic training in theatre service is practically indispensable. As Harris says in his manual: "Promotion is not necessarily based on the length of service although this factor is given prime consideration. The all important factors in advancement are aptitude, industry and diligent attention to duty. Duty is not defined as the satisfactory discharge of definitely assigned work but rather as the handling of such work plus an alert and helpful attitude toward those phases of theatre operation with which you are not directly connected."

Because of the difference in size, physical makeup and class of the various theatres it would be an impossible task to prepare a manual or provide instructions that could be intelligently directed to cover "individual service personnel." I do feel that the pertinent data set forth above is an excellent foundation on which to lay the groundwork for the building of any and all theatre service and that no owner or manager can follow the suggestions provided without effecting a marked improvement that customers will be quick to notice and that will have its reflection in added dollars laid on that little marble slab that means so much to all of us.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

Pick Personnel with Future Potentialities

With Care, Preparedness, Staff Will be Ready to Meet Many Emergencies

From motion picture company personnel directors, from chain theatre zone managers and from others in a position to know what they are talking about comes the information that turnover in theatre operating personnel is costly and whenever the turnover in normal times exceeds what they consider to be the norm, immediate investigation into the causes thereof gets under way.

These same experts in their field estimate pretty closely that it costs to hire theatre personnel as follows: ushers, $25; doormen, $50; cashiers, $75; chiefs of service and assistant managers, $100.

Any theatre manager or exhibitor can be sure that these figures amount to considerable money, even though the exact cost does not immediately show in the theatre balance sheet but he can be sure he pays approximately the same amounts every time he adds the name of a newcomer to his theatre payroll. The time taken to adequately train new members of the staff comes out of box-office returns just as sure as death and taxes.

There are many reasons for excessive labor turnover in front-of-theatre operation and probably the greatest reason for such frequent changes in normal times is lack of care in choosing help. Sometimes the banker of the local politician has a deserving young man he wishes to place, and rather than incur the displeasure of the young man's sponsor the theatreman hires him despite his own personal feelings. Following the line of least resistance in these cases, however, usually redounds to the theatreman's own considerable loss. An explanation to the sponsor that in the hiring of staff members only those who intend to make exhibition and theatre management their life work are desirable, might take the pressure off for all time.

Even in the theatre business there are such things as Career Men—boys and ushers today, perhaps, but youngsters who have decided that connections with theatres and the motion picture business leads eventually to well paying, interesting jobs.

Every exhibitor knows that the problems that face him during the long road ahead to reconversion and peace-time pursuits will be many and complex. Time taken from the myriad duties he will have to perform in management, publicity, exploitation, etc., will actually cost him money. And if he must take that time to constantly train replacements because of lack of foresight and care in selection of his personnel, there is not enough time in any day to do his own job with any degree of forcefulness that will be necessary to keep his own head above water.

By foresight, care and preparedness any exhibitor can place himself in the position to have trained personnel on hand so that in any event he can promote from within—his usher may become chief of service, his chief of service may become assistant manager, etc. As long as each employe knows he is being readied for promotion he will be loyal and willing to take his chances on promotion. If not. He'll quit to take the next best paying job he can find.

In the future it might be well to use the following table of qualifications in selecting personnel to replace the makeshift group it was necessary to hire during the war years. The table was prepared by a prominent director of personnel for one of the big producer-distributor organizations, charged with the hiring and firing of thousands of employes. These are the qualities necessary for the future development of leaders in the theatre field.

Appearance—Neatness, Cleanliness, Posture, Smile, etc.

Loyalty—Remarks, comments, attitude toward the firm, superiors, etc.

Willingness—Spirit displayed in work, activeness, obedience to orders.

Interest—Thoughtfulness, ideas, attention to detail.

Conduct—Behavior on and off duty, profanity, excessive drinking, bad companions, etc.

Attitude—Bright, alert, contented; acceptance of criticism; does he get along with fellow workers?

Courtesy—Politeness in speech and manner; radiation of personality.

Service—Performance of duty, attention to sound, maintenance, etc.

Punctuality—On time, adherence to schedule, faithfulness to duty.

Adaptability—Working ease, versatility, self-instruction, quality.

Grading of newer employes along the lines suggested above will give an exhibitor a pretty fair idea of the potentialities of any member and guide him along better lines in future employment of personnel. Any young man who can come up to these requirements is worth the ex-

RULES FOR THEATRE USHERS

Julius Lamm of Warner Bros. Uptown Theatre, Cleveland, seems to have taken a page from the armed services, which require its sentries to learn, word for word, a set of "General Orders," which define exactly what the sentry's duties are. In the Uptown Theatre ushers are required to memorize a set of rules that might be applied to advantage in any theatre. In knowing them and carrying them out exactly, ushers carry service to the Nth degree and build that all-important goodwill for the theatre that employs them. The rules are printed here for the convenience of other managers who might want to install this type of service:

1. Be neat. Be on time. Do not talk loudly. Do not chew gum.
2. Be dignified. Avoid unnecessary conversation.
3. Do not encourage flirtations with patrons.
4. Never give short or flip answers.
5. Avoid listlessness. Stand erect at your post.
6. Keep cool. Never lose your temper.
7. Never argue when the subject is beyond you: refer to your superior.
8. Maintain quiet during the performance.
9. Make special effort to comfort elderly people.
10. Report anyone changing seats more than once during a performance.
11. Never be discourteous . . . grouchy people can't stand up under kindness.
12. Always meet rudeness with tact and kindness.
13. Dont grouch . . . We sell good service just as we do good pictures.
14. Always wear a cheerful smile.
15. Strive to please and satisfy every patron as if you owned the theatre yourself.
16. Do not say "yes" and "no," but "Yes, sir" and "No, sir" or "Ma'am" as the case may be.
17. "This way, please" . . . "Thank you, sir" are magic phrases. Always use these and and similar phrases when speaking to patrons.
18. Mothers with crying babies should be asked to step to the foyer until the baby becomes quiet.
19. Remember that business, like friendship, is sensitive. It goes where it is best treated and stays where it is best served.
20. You, by your conduct, can make or break this theatre. It may take $100 worth of advertising to coax a new patron and you, with surly manner or sulky words, may drive him away, perhaps never to return.
21. Never, under any condition, is an usher to leave his post without permission, or to leave the floor before time is up.
22. Do not let friends loiter around your aisle or to talk with you.
23. If you are given an order by proper authority, you are expected to carry it out immediately. Playfulness in the mezzanine when off duty will not be tolerated and may lead to release. Stay away from exit doors except in cases of emergency.

Comment on these rules will be welcomed as will be additional rules or regulations used by any theatre to take care of special conditions.

Your Biggest Peace Time Job: The Red Cross Drive—March 20 to 26th

BOX OFFICE SLANT

Johnny Comes Flying Home

20th Century-Fox Drama 65 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Mildly entertaining story of returned servicemen. Should please average audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Not strong enough for a leading feature but good family fare for any double-bill program.

Cast: Richard Crane, Faye Marlowe, Martha Stewart, Charles Russell, Roy Roberts, Henry Morgan, Charles Tannen, Elaine Langan, Marietta Canty, Anthony Sydes, Selmer Jackson, John Hamilton, Harry Tyler, Frank Meredith, Tom Dugan, Grayce Hampton, Hugh Beaumont, Bernie Sell, Walter Baldwin, Will Wright. Credits: Directed by Benjamin Stoloff. Produced by Aubrey Schenck. Screenplay by Jack Andrews and George Bricker based on a story by Jack Andrews. Photography, Harry Jackson.

Plot: Three former army combat fliers pool their finances, buy a war-surplus plane and set up an air freight business. Richard Crane, ordered by army medicos not to fly for at least a year, is the business agent, Martha Stewart is the small company's mechanic. Charles Russell gets a chance to test a new army jet plane and with the money received the trio can buy another plane and become successful. Russell's wife is about to have a baby so Crane tricks Russell and tests the plane successfully. With the aid of Martha Stewart, he is on the road toward launching a new fleet of air-freight planes.

Comment: The story is lightweight, but pleasing, and the young principal players are not called upon to reach any histrionic heights But they all acquit themselves creditable in this modestly produced, deftly directed film. Martha Stewart looks luscious enough and seems capable of being cast in more important roles in the future. The entire film is unimportant, but it provides 65 minutes of light, pleasing entertainment, which it obviously set out to do. Suitable for any double-bill program.

The Bride Wore Boots

Paramount Comedy 85 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Directorial tricks cannot overcome film's thin plot. Not for discriminating audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Name of Barbara Stanwyck and others will help draw them in, but beyond that, the film will be on its own.

Cast: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Cummings, Diana Lynn, Patric Knowles, Peggy Wood, Robert Benchley, Willie Best, Natalie Wood, Gregory Muradian, Mary Young. Credits: Produced by Seton I. Miller. Director, Irving Pichel. Screnplay by Dwight Mitchell Wiley from a story by Mr. Wiley and a play by Harry Segall. Photography, Stuart Thompson.

Plot: A successful Virginia author and his wife argue because she is fond of horses and he hates them, while he pursues Confederate history with avidity and she dislikes it. Things are further complicated by a handsome trainer for the wife's horses, whose desire for her causes antagonism between him and the husband. Divorce ensues when matters are still further complicated by a pretty young girl enamoured of the husband. Husband and wife are finally reunited by a steeplechase in which he literally risks his neck to save his pride and his better half.

Comment: The principal difficulty with this picture is its thin plot which cannot be overcome by a bag of directorial tricks. Comedy situations are too forced and gags are repeated when they weren't funny in the first place. Throughout, Miss Stanwyck and Cummings laugh constantly in an artificial way, a fact that soon becomes obvious to the average audience because of the lack of humor in the situations. Both principals try too hard. The choice of Miss Stanwyck's costumes is just as illogical as the rest of the picture: when she appears in an evening gown, the audience wonders why, because there is no logical explanation, other than perhaps the costumer thought it might look well at that point. Best performance, as far as realism is concerned, is that of Willie Best as an understanding stableman. Photography is a redeeming factor, with the finishing shots of the steeplechase event done particularly well. Diana Lynn scores in an unsympathetic role. Technical departments are up to par.

The Spider Woman Strikes Back

Universal Horror 59 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Another "horror" offering to satisfy the fans.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: An average "shocker" that will fill out double bills or be used to advantage in exploitation "horror" shows.

Cast: Gale Sondergaard, Brenda Joyce, Rondo Hatton, Kirby Grant, Milburn Stone, Hobart Cavanaugh, Norman Leavitt. Credits: Produced by Howard Welsch. Directed by Arthur Lubin. Screenplay, Eric Taylor. Photography, Paul Ivano, Musical director, Milton Rosen.

Plot: Mystery surrounds a ranch where a supposedly blind woman is poisoning cattle in the vicinity in an effort to drive away other ranchers and gain their land. A young girl, companion to the 'blind" woman, discovers the truth, placing her life in jeopardy. She is saved in the nick of time by her boy friend, who rescues her from the flames which the Spider Woman has set to destroy evidence of her crimes. The Spider Woman and her dumb helper are consumed by the fire, however.

Comment: An illogical plot, done in the stereotyped manner of most horror pictures, wastes Gale Sondergaard's talents. Brenda Joyce, cast as a beautiful young girl with supposedly great appeal, looks tired and anything but beautiful. On the credit side of the ledger, the music is good for its purpose, materially helping to establish mood. Photography is also adequate. While the film is in the "adult" classification, it will probably be viewed by more kids than any one else which is as it should be, for the film never rises above adolescent intelligence. One keeps waiting for something really frightening to happen, but it never quite comes off.

Out of the Depths

Columbia War Drama 60 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Realistic and emotionally restrained, this better-than-average war drama of submarine warfare should please audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Because of its lack of names and its out-of-date theme, this picture will be relegated to a second feature position on dual bills, although word-of-mouth publicity may help. Play up the deeds of the submarine in the war, and use local discharged submarine crewmen as part of your campaign.

Cast: Jim Bannon, Ross Hunter, Loren Tindall, Robert Scott, Frank Sully, George Khan, Coulter Irwin, George Offerman, Jr., Rodric Redwing, Robert Williams, William Newell, Warren Mills and John Tyrrell. Credits: Directed by D. Ross Lederman. Screenplay by Martin Berkeley and Ted Thomas. Photography, Philip Tannura. Musical direction, Mischa Bakaleinikoff. Produced by Wallace MacDonald.

Plot: A submarine sets out to rescue an Army intelligence officer from the coast of Korea. En route, Japanese acceptance of the surrender terms is received, but the craft is attacked by Jap ships. Rescue is effected and the submarine attempts to warn the high command of a plot to bomb the "Missouri" on surrender day. Failing that, the submarine attacks a Japanese Kamikase carrier and sinks it.

Comments: This is a satisfactory associate feature with enough realism to give the story credulity. The oft-repeated theme of submarine action, well done in this instance, will give audiences an insight into the life of all members of undersea craft. There is logic in the action—no thrills for thrills' sake—and acts of heroism are properly restrained. The tenseness of the crew when the ship is damaged and the men's struggle to breathe will grip every spectator. The humorous scenes, for the most part, fall flat, and have been done numerous times before. The acting is capable, direction is handled with a light hand, but the photography falls short of average standards. Although a better-than-average war drama that should win favorable audience reaction, its out-of-date them will affect its drawing power and relegate the film to the lower half of a dual bill.

Dark Is the Night

(English Titles)

Artkino Drama 70 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Grim story of the individual Russian's active resistance to Nazi rule during the occupation. Basically familiar but interestingly done.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Perfect for the so-called "art" theatres but of little value to the ordinary, run-of-the-mill commercial theatre.

Plot: Two wounded Russian flyers are hidden and fed by a young girl in a captured Russian village. In spite of the Nazis' intense search for these flyers and other Russian soldiers, the girl succeeds in her plans, the flyers escape and return when the town is recaptured.

Comment: Although the plot is familiar, it is done so well that from a pure entertainment point of view this is an excellent film. The acting is very much above the ordinary and the direction is superb. Camera work is in an unfamiliar pattern, so unconventional in fact that for the average American audience it might interfere with the film's thorough enjoyment. There is very little dialog, with the director depending upon situations easily understood without vocal interspersion. Director Barnet also appears as the Nazi commandant, underplaying the ruthless, contemptuous overlord in a manner that makes his part more abhorrent than if played with the usual exaggerations. Irina Radehenko plays the village girl with fine sensitivity, giving the part warmth and life. The film as a whole is good entertainment, grim perhaps, but most realistic. It is perfect for the "art" houses but its advanced directorial and camera treatment, together with the fact that it is in the Russian language with English titles, and lacks any familiar names in its cast, offer little value to the average commercial theatre.

The Kid From Brooklyn

RKO-Radio Comedy With Music 114 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) A whiz of a show for any theatre anywhere and the perfect answer to the few carping critics of admissions increases (small as they have been), because where can the amusement-seeker get more for his money than in this lavish, colorful, laugh-getting, eye-caressing parade of tip-top screen entertainment?

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Almost perfect follow-up to "Wonder Man" and should better grosses for that attraction at every situation.

Cast: Danny Kaye, Virginia Mayo, Vera-Ellen, Steve Cochran, Eve Arden, Walter Abel, Lionel Stander, Fay Bainter, Clarence Kolb, The Goldwyn Girls and others. Credits: Produced by Samuel Goldwyn. Directed by Norman Z. McLeod. Adapted by Don Hartman and Melville Shavelson. From a screenplay by Grover Jones, Frank Butler and Richard Connell. Based on a play by Lynn Root and Harry Clork. Gregg Toland, director of Photography. Art direction, Perry Ferguson, Stewart Chaney, Associate—McClure Caps. Dances, Bernard Pearce. "Pavlova"—words and music by Sylvia Fine and Max Liebman; "You're the Cause of it All," "I Love an Old Fashioned Song," "Hey, What's Your Name?", "Josie," "The Sunflower Song"—music and lyrics by Jule Styne and Sammy Cahn.

Plot: An enthusiastic, but not too accomplished milk delivery man comes into prominence when it appears that he has knocked out the middleweight champion following the latter's efforts to flirt with the milkman's sister—a dancer at a night club. By working on the fellow's love for a pretty singer, the fighter's manager induces the shy and not athletic milkman to sign up to fight his way up to the championship. A series of fixed fights on the road are won by the milkman, who comes to believe that he can fight—much to the disappointment of his sister and his fiance. He does win the championship by a fluke and under circumstances as farcical as any ever happening in the history of the ring.

Comment: Sam Goldwyn has rung the bell again—but good this time, with a whiz of a show of the wholly escapist, entirely eye-filling and completely-satisfying-to-the-appetite-for-laughs variety. The attraction is sure to click in even better fashion than "Wonder Man" at all theatres where the latter picture played. Kaye has made tremendous strides forward as a screen star and unless all signs fail he will zoom up into the highest brackets as a drawing card with this handsome, diverting and excitingly colorful show. There are no exceptionally stand-out tunes, but several numbers register most pleasingly as lovely combinations of nice songs, pretty dancing and gorgeous spectacles of color and movement. Altogether this is a picture that the showman can offer to his patrons with assurances that no reasonable person anywhere can ask for more for his or her money than will blossom forth on the screen that presents "The Kid From Brooklyn." The play on which it is based is one that was done back in 1936 as a straight comedy with Harold Lloyd as the star. It's an amusing premise for a Kaye show, and that's about all that is done with the basic play—it's a mere premise for the typical Goldwyn choreography, lavish sets, pretty women and a gathering of expert and expertly-cast players. Kaye is at his best in one swell number after another. He is most ably assisted by the glittering Miss Virginia Mayo and the winsome and most capable dancing lady known as Vera-Ellen. These two appeared with Kaye in "Wonder Man" and Goldwyn has made no mistake in preserving the winning combination of this facile triumvirate. Excellent performances are given by several others, most notably by Walter Abel as the fast-talking fight manager. Abel is by way of being, perhaps, the surest bet in all Hollywood for a comedy role of this type. Eve Arden, Fay Bainter, Lionel Stander, Steve Cochran and Clarence Kolb, among others are splendid in their roles. So far as the Technicolor direction and photography is concerned, we've never seen any better, more "true" color on the screen, and perhaps never such ingenious and tasteful use of color for costuming, sets and lighting. "The Kid From Brooklyn" starts getting its laughs early in the game—a tremendous factor for the success of any comedy in the theatre. It goes on getting laughs, delighting with its carefree air of jesting and its spectacular beauty of girls, costumes and settings. Here's a show for the showman to go to town with in bringing 'em in and showing 'em a good time for their money.

The Notorious Lone Wolf

Columbia Comedy-Drama 64 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) This entry in the Lone Wolf series is acceptable entertainment for all types of audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Heads a double bill program in a New York chain theatre but it is not strong enough for that elevated category in most spots.

Cast: Gerald Mohr, Janis Carter, Eric Blore, John Abbott, William Davidson, Don Beddoe, Adelle Roberts, Robert Scott, Peter Whitney, Olaf Hytten, Ian Wolfe, Edith Evanson, Maurice Cass, Eddie Acuff, Virginia Hunter. Credits: Screenplay by Martin Berkeley and Edward Dein. Adaptation by Garrett Graham. Story by William J. Bowers based upon a work by Louis Joseph Vance. Produced by Ted Richmond. Directed by D. Ross Lederman. Photography, Burnett Guffey.

Plot: Gerald Mohr returns from combat duty prepared to take up where he left off with Janis Carter when he is questioned by detectives about the disappearance of a fabulous jewel. In the usual formula he and the ever faithful Eric Blore recover the jewel for the police.

Comment: Although this story follows the Lone Wolf formula it is much better than most of its predecessors. The comedy is sly and deft and performances are commendable. Gerald Mohr is sufficiently suave, Janis Carter is sufficiently beautiful and exhibits a fine sense of comedy and Eric Blore exhibits his usual propensity for buttling in the accepted movie style. Producer Ted Richmond has given the picture a goodly share of production values and Director Lederman has handled his cast with a light touch. The picture is good entertainment but not sufficiently strong to lead double bills in most situations.

You Can't Do Without Love

Columbia Comedy with Music 74 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Just a fairly entertaining story. Audiences not too fussy about credibility probably will like it.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Unknown players make it another candidate for double-bill programs.

Cast: Vera Lynn, Donald Stewart, Mary Clare, Frederick Leister, Phyllis Stanley, Cyril Smith, Richard Murdoch, Mavis Villiers, Peggy Anne, Jeannette Redgrave. Credits: Screenplay by Howard Irving Young and Peter Fraser from a story by Peter Fraser. Directed by Walter Forde. Photography, Otto Heller.

Plot: Vera Lynn tries to get an audition from Donald Stewart, a British government official and former theatrical producer. She meets him when Stewart's wallet is planted on her and it develops that Stewart is in possession of a valuable painting which crooks are trying to steal from him. Vera sings at a charity affair so that Stewart can hear her, but he becomes involved with the crooks. Eventually everything straightens out satisfactorily.

Comment: This evidently is British made, by an all-British cast, with the dialog sometimes unintelligible. The cast performs fairly well in spite of the incredible story, with Vera Lynn revealing a surprisingly throaty, melodious singing voice. The music is pleasant and some other entertainment during the charity affair is very good, but the direction or story, or both, permit the entertainment to interrupt action so that the tenuous thread of story is lost at times. As a whole the film is just fair entertainment suitable as the lower half of double-bill programs.

The Outlaw

United Artists Outdoor-Action 115 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) Subject of much controversy because of some objectionable scenes, "The Outlaw" is being released for the general public with the same scenes intact. An entertaining outdoor story about Billy the Kid for those curious enough to see Jane Russell, the girl about whom so much has been written and said in the last three years, and those who like Westerns.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Has lots and lots of exploitable features and plenty of advance advertising. This should help, with the draw of the names, to put it across, with the possibility that it may well turn out to be one of the top grossers of the season.

Cast: Jane Russell, Jack Buetel, Mimi Aguglia, Walter Huston, Thomas Mitchell and others. Credits: Produced and directed by Howard Hughes. Screenplay by Jules Furthman. Photography, Gregg Toland. Musical direction, Victor Young.

Plot: Buetel, as Billy the Kid, arrives in the same town as Walter Huston, who is looking for his horse, which Buetel had stolen. Mitchell is the sheriff of the town and an old pal of Huston. Buetel and Huston become friends until Buetel steals Jane Russell, Huston's girl, then turn enemies. The picture ends with Buetel the winner on all counts.

Comment: Back in February, 1943, Howard Hughes the producer-director of this picture, took a group of trade paper representatives to San Francisco for its first showing. Much had been heard about the new names he was introducing, because of the tremendous amount of advance publicity built up around them. This was especially true about Jane Russell, whom Hughes considered his best find since Jean Harlow. The reactions, after the showing were varied, but no doubt was left in anyone's mind that this would be quite an undertaking for Hughes to put across. There were too many scenes that were questionable in regards to their passing the state censors, and most people who saw the picture wondered how these had passed the then Hays offices. Two in particular were out of line, and some of the clothes Jane Russell wore were entirely too revealing, especially for a western, or shall we say, an outdoor action picture. Back on the shelf the film was placed until Hughes decided the time had arrived for its acceptance by the censors and the general public. With a United Artist release arranged, the picture was again shown to the trade press, and this reviewer, who was one of those at the first showing, was there to see it again and determine what changes had been made. Strangely enough, very few. It is still the same, slow-moving outdoor picture about Billy the Kid, with such top names as Walter Huston and Thomas Mitchell in important feature roles. Heading the cast are Jane Russell and a new young man, Jack Buetel, who has done nothing since. One can note at once that they are both unfamiliar with camera technique, for their actions seem to be exactly what the director ordered. Both are rather attractive; Buetel in a dark and handsome way and Jane in all the ways necessary to appeal to the average male. The picture, with all its advance exploitation, and the curiosity aroused by it in the minds of the public, should prove to be one of the top grossers of the season, not only due to the exploitation and curiosity, but also because of the way the pendulum is swinging in regard to screen censorship. A number of recent films, which were originally banned by state boards, were eventually passed because of public demand.

The Wife of Monte Cristo

PRC Drama 79 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) A lively adventure story that should delight the action fans and thoroughly entertain all types of audiences.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Although there is a lack of marquee names high-powered exploitation based on the provocative and adventurous title, and favorable word-of-mouth comments should provide this film with better-than-average business.

Cast: John Loder, Lenore Aubert, Charles Dingle, Fritz Kortner, Eduardo Cianelli, Martin Kosleck, Fritz Feld, Eva Gabor, Clancy Cooper, John Bleifer, Egon Brecher, Anthony Warde, Colin Campbell, Crane Whitley. Credits: Screenplay by Dorcas Cochran from an original story by Franz Rosenwald and Edgar G. Ulmer. Produced by Leon Fromkess. Associate producer, Jack Grant. Directed by Edgar G. Ulmer. Photography, Adolph Edward Kull.

Plot: Lenore Aubert, Countess of Monte Cristo, takes her husband's place as The Avenger when he is wounded. She leads an underground band which raids and destroys shipments of poisonous medicine, sold to the populace as a cure-all for the plague by Prefect of Police John Loder and his partners. She is trapped and imprisoned, and Martin Kosleck (Monte Cristo) returns to save her, kills the prefect in a duel and the two leave the city together.

Comment: Probably the most ambitious production to be made by PRC "The Wife of Monte Cristo" reflects the care bestowed on it by Producer Leon Fromkess and Associate Producer Jack Grant. The film is opulent, the costumes are gorgeous and the net result is 79 minutes of good, actionful drama, based on the old Monte Cristo legend, touched up with a new twist. The acting is better than above par, with John Loder and Lenore Aubert standing out in excellent performances. The film's only weakness is its occasionally stilted dialog, but that may be an attempt to reflect the language of the times. Direction of Edgar G. Ulmer is sketchy at times, so that the film loses some of the smooth action that might have benefited it. But this is not so important a drawback when the effort is considered as a whole. For the most part, the names are not of box-office calibre, but in view of the title and the fact that the film is an adventure story with widespread appeal, smart showmen should have a field day setting up a campaign that will result in better-than-average business. Favorable word-of-mouth publicity will bring added revenue after opening day.

Blonde Alibi

Universal Mystery 62 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Just a fair attraction as a dual feature. Mystery fans may be drawn by that angle, but will find the mystery easy to solve.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Play up the mystery angle. Martha O'Driscoll's name may cause some interest.

Cast: Martha O'Driscoll, Tom Neal, Donald MacBride, Robert Armstrong, Samuel S. Hinds, Elisha Cook, Jr., Peter Whitney, Oliver Blake, John Berkes and Matt Willis. Credits: Directed by Will Jason. Produced and written by George Bricker. Based on an original story by Gordon Kahn. Photography, Maury Gertsman. Executive producer, Ben Pivar.

Plot: Suspected of the murder of a wealthy doctor is his girl friend who is leaving for South America to meet her true love, a flier. Then suspicion concentrates on the flier who, it seems, has been in the city all the time after having been released from a jail sentence. Other suspects: a cabbie, a small-time thief and a half-blind scientist. Eventually the real killer is trapped and the girl and flier happily reunited.

Comments: "Blonde Alibi" is weak on all counts, with the obvious solution apparent to the audience long before the climax. Martha O'Driscoll and Tom Neal, as the romantic leads, show no enthusiasm in routine performances. John Berkes is outstanding as a small-time thief, and Donald MacBride and Peter Whitney are efficient as the detective inspector and his aide. The film can only be recommended as a dual feature with a strong main attraction, best suited for the mystery fans.

Try This Theatre-Radio Tieup

A 15-minute program entitled Pick the Hit is being broadcast daily over station CJAD, Montreal, through a tieup between the Imperial Theatre and the station. Three tunes are played, with participants deciding in which order they are most popular. The tune receiving the largest number of choices in letters to the station is the winner. The best letter is chosen, and if the writer's choices agree with the majority, he or she wins $5 and two theatre tickets. If the winning letter is not in accord with the majority choices, the writer receives the two tickets, but the $5 is held over until the next day. Interspersed between numbers on the program are plugs on the films showing at the Imperial.

Radio, Co-op Ads Sell 'Abilene' in Norfolk

A radio audience participation show, cooperative newspaper advertising and timely Valentine's Day windows together with window displays on books and other merchandise, highlighted the exploitation campaign essayed by Manager Charles Yerbey for his showing at Loew's State Theatre, Norfolk, of Jules Levey's "Abilene Town," a United Artists release.

The radio show was broadcast from the stage of the theatre by Joe Brown and his radio Gang via station WRVA, with contestants vieing for prizes. Nylon hose offered for the feminine winners caused considerable interest. Children were awarded cash prizes. Stations WGH and WTAR ran special transcriptions three days in advance of opening.

Cooperative advertising on Coro Jewelery and McGregor shirts was carried by Norfolk newspapers with Schneer's jewelry store and Ames & Brownley sponsoring.

Special music displays for the United Artists film were set up in the windows and inside the stores of W. T. Grant, Woolworth's, the Mozart Music Shop, Stagg Piano Company and the Tidewater Music Company. The Grosset and Dunlap edition of "Trail Town," the book from which the picture was adapted, brought window displays in W. T. Grant, Kresge, Terrie Paper Company and the Atlantic Book Store.

Valentine's Day window displays and others in men's clothing and hat stores also were arranged and leading hotels displayed special standees in their lobbies. A 22-foot sign was displayed across the front of Henderson's, largest newsstand in Virginia, plugging the book and the film's playdate at the State.

A street ballyhoo consisting of an automobile plastered with stills from the picture toured Norfolk's streets to round out the campaign.

Contest Plug 'Whistle'

Among the stunts arranged by Paul Morris, United Artists publicist for "Whistle Stop" at Loew's Poli, Hartford, was a Guess Who contest in the Hartford Times in which contestants were asked to identify the names of girls with George Raft in a series of daily published photos. Guest tickets went to winners. A whistling contest via station WTHT was another highlight of the campaign.—HA.

Pic-Tour Ad as 1-Sheet

A two-color one-sheet reproduction of RKO Radio's Pic-Tour of the Month advertisement, now appearing in the March 11 issue of Life and the April issue of Woman's Companion, is now available for exhibitors to use in lobby displays. It is planned to issue a similar one-sheet on each of the company's future Pic-Tour magazine ads.

70 Million Readers for Universal's 'My Love' Ads

An advertising readership in excess of 70 millions is claimed for the campaign about to start for Universal's "So Goes My Love," starring Myrna Loy and Don Ameche and produced by Jack Skirball and Bruce Manning.

Star, Player Mats Ready

An Editor's Service consisting of a large selection of one-column and thumbnail mats of leading RKO Radio players is being issued by the company's press department. It is available on request so as to be readily on hand to illustrate shorts and feature stories.

RKO-Decca Virginia Tieup Aid to Future Playdates

Starting with the opening of "The Bells of St. Mary's" at the Byrd and State theatres, Richmond, RKO Radio pictures will benefit by a tieup between R. Corvina, Decca Records distributor, and RKO Radio Field Exploiteer Douglas Beck. In Richmond, 11 music stores offered window displays on "Bells," also three stores in nearby Petersburg. Cooperative ads in four Richmond papers will be paid for by Decca and its retail outlets.

Fifty Decca albums of Crosby records were contributed for use in two radio contests: one broadcast for two weeks, around the clock, over station WLEE, called "Bing Crosby Sings," offering 25 albums plus $50 cash for the best letters on "Why I Should See Bing Crosby in 'Bells of St. Mary's'"; the other, over WRVA, gave away 25 albums for the best letters on "Why You Are Glad You Are You," with the song of that name featured.

In addition, a Richmond department store, working with Beck, set up a series of newspaper cooperative ads.

Window displays and cooperative ads on "Bells" are certain in the smaller communities through the Decca distribution, which controls 235 outlets throughout Virginia.

Start 'Bells' Campaign

Every RKO Theatre in Brooklyn and New York now has a bell-shaped sign on the sides of the box-offices stating the fact that the theatre doors will be opened at 9 a.m. starting April 22nd when "The Bells Of St. Marys" opens.

FANTASTICALLY LAVISH WINDOWS. These examples of the eight almost fantastically lavish windows that were set up in Fifth Avenue's fashionable Bonwit Teller store in New York have attracted widespread attention to United Artists' forthcoming release of "Caesar and Cleopatra." The displays were the focal point of the store's cooperative campaign to push its wares and the film, and included interior displays on each floor in the building and announcement displays in each of its elevators. A full-page advertisement in the New York Times and a boxed ad calling attention to the larger one also were part of the important promotion. The very lavishness of these displays in which the store plugged its "Night-on-the-Nile Nighties" and hieroglyphic jewelry in honor of the film, indicate the value attached to it by the store. Considerable time in advance for arrangements with stores in other cities will be required to duplicate the promotion, set in New York by Leon Brandt of United Artists' home office staff.

Ingenuity in Selling Copy Marks Programs of Borland

Chicago Showman Holds Public's Patronage by Front-Cover Messages

There are theatremen who budget a certain amount of their advertising expenditure for programs without taking the trouble to see that the programs do an effective job of selling the theatre and its attractions. The money these theatremen spend is not returned in the form of better business simply because little or no ingenuity is exercised in the preparation of program copy. Attractions, playdates and perhaps times of shows are listed each week, but that "certain something" to maintain interest in the program is missing.

Contrast the foregoing theatremen with those constantly striving to make their programs accessories that patrons will read, keep and act upon. They spend their money for programs, too, but they get it back—and more—in extra returns at the box-office because they make every effort to point out the advantages of their theatres and their attractions. They utilize a portion of the program—be it front page or back—to address their patrons through "personal messages."

An example of the latter type of theatreman is Hugh Borland, manager of the Louis Theatre, Chicago. Without any particular attention on Borland's part, other than the listing of his attractions for the week, his program could easily be just an ordinary affair. But such is not the case. Borland is always utilizing the front page of his program to tell his patrons about the Louis, to remind them of its advantages as an entertainment center, to call attention to specific features he wishes to emphasize. A few pront-page messages, taken at random, are reprinted below:

"PLEASING YOU—Pleasing you is the motto of your theatre. The Louis is always ready and willing to serve its patrons in every respect. It is our aim that every patron on entering the Louis feel relaxed and at ease, just as they would go about their own home in the course of their daily routine. Our features and their surrounding programs are centered around your every desire and want. If there should be some particular want of yours, your suggestions toward filling that want are heartily welcomed by us. Pleasing you is pleasing us. Attend the Louis regularly."

"STARS OF TOMORROW—During the coming months we are going to show many good pictures. They have been made from novels which entertained millions, and from magazine serials which gave many weeks of pleasure to readers. These pictures have no big stars—but they have actors and actresses who will be the stars of tomorrow. So, just a tip for the future: don't disregard a picture simply because it has no popular star in the leading role. You may be robbing yourself of truly splendid entertainment."

"LOST AND FOUND DEPARTMENT—It is our sincere desire that our Lost and Found department may be able to render real service to you. During the course of a week many and varied articles of wearing apparel, jewelry and miscellaneous belongings are lost by Louis patrons on the floor of this theatre. These articles are gathered up by the janitors when the house is cleaned and then turned in to our Lost and Found department. It affords us great pleasure to be able to return every lost article to its rightful owner, so do not hesitate to inquire in case you may have lost, or think you may have lost, some of your personal belongings in this theatre. On behalf of the Louis staff I can pledge our utmost cocperation in endeavoring to return your property to you."

"A NECESSARY INSTITUTION—Did you ever stop to think about the importance of the motion picture theatre? The motion picture theatre provides a place of amusement for the boys and girls that cannot be duplicated. Think what would happen if the theatres in your locality were closed. What would the young and old people do with their idle time? At the motion picture theatre young people see pictures that stress the moral values of life. Take away the motion pictures and young people would be forced to devise new forms of amusement. Would they be as safe as motion picture amusement?"

"TASTES DIFFER—Do you like western pictures? If you don't there are many hundreds of thousands of moviegoers who do. Do you like love stories? If you do, there are many hundreds of thousands who don't. You must always remember that tastes differ in movies as well as in clothes, autos and the other important things that go to make up our daily lives. Remember, we are always trying to please the biggest majority. We do this by providing a variety of movies—dramas, comedies, westerns, romances—something for everyone. Tastes differ . . . and we are always trying to please YOU—and YOU—and YOU!"

ARE YOUR ARCHES FALLING?—Is your spine giving away? Ah! Too much Christmas shopping. But don't worry. We've a sure cure for you. A tonic that'll pep you up and fit you for tomorrow's assault on those crowded counters. Just a regular series of visits to the Louis Theatre where our pre-Christmas Jubilee Joy Shows will provide just the relaxation you need. A dazzling array of really important pictures especially selected for December because they radiate the joyous spirit of the day."

Besides the foregoing messages (which, by the way, are only a few of the hundreds Borland writes), the Louis management uses various and sundry means of arousing his patrons' curiosity. For example, he may cover the front page of a program with several question-marks and the admonition to "watch this page next week." On the following week he printed an important announcement upside down, then asked patrons to "turn this page right side up for the message below and it will reveal the question-mark mystery." To advertise a serial, this copy was used: "Over back porches, counters, bridge tables, cooking stoves, typewriters, ironing boards and dinner tables they're all telling you not to miss a single chapter of our new first-run, action-packed chapter-play 'Belle Star, Reporter,' etc."

If other showmen would take as much care in the preparation of their programs as Borland, they'd find a greater demand for them and an ever-increasing line at the box-office.

THE REAL THING. To exploit the showing of Universal's "This Love of Ours" at the Granada Theatre, Kansas City, Kans., Manager Charles W. Barnes, Jr., arranged the display shown above with a local furniture dealer. Barnes' assistant, Bob Hockensmith, designed the large picture frame in which a real live model was seated. Theatre credits (not shown) were on card in front and to right of the display.

Striking Bdwy. Front on 'Tomorrow Is Forever'

A sign, 154 ft. long and 30 ft. high, the product of the publicity and exploitation staff of RKO Radio, in cooperation with International Pictures and theatre staff publicists, covers the entire front of New York's Winter Garden Theatre, transforming it into an eye-catching display for the current engagement of International's "Tomorrow Is Forever." With 8-foot high letters, wired to twinkle, spell, flow or bombard, the sign spells out the title and star names.

Over 3500 15-watt lamps are used in addition to 2000 feet of fluorescent tubing.

'San Antonio' Costumes Sell Film for Ackery

A strong ballyhoo campaign on Warners' "San Antonio" was staged by Ivan Ackery, manager of Famous Players' Orpheum Theatre, Vancouver.

Highlight of Ackery's promotion was special "San Antonio" costumes which were worn by his usherettes two weeks prior to the opening. Thousands of heralds were distributed in Vancouver through a tieup with Liberty magazine, and special newspaper advertising and radio time augmented Ackery's activities.

GETS ATTENTION. This window display on "Spellbound" indicates the importance attached by merchants to motion picture tieups as attention grabbers. Display was set by J. G. Samartano, Loew's State Theatre, Providence, in Liggett's and ties up with the book. Other merchandise is placed close to the display, benefiting by the attention value of the film's exposition.

Exploitation Campaign of the Month

February 1946

CINDERELLA JONES

(Warner Bros.)

Newspapers, Radio, Stores Accept Cinderella Contest

When the Warner home office publicity crew made a deal with a plastic manufacturer to make real glass slippers, the heat was on for the idea they had conceived to exploit the company's "Cinderella Jones." Enough slippers were made to enable the Warner field publicity men to stage "Search for Cinderella" contests in key spots throughout the country, with contestants required to try on the glass slippers and aspiring misses promised just about everything they could promote in the way of gifts and entertainment should they be winners in the various contests. Details were changed slightly to fit situations in each locality. The series of campaigns aroused so much enthusiasm that a panel of judges has grouped the campaign reports and selected them for SHOWMEN'S TRADE REVIEW as the Exploitation Campaign of the Month for February, 1946.

Details of early campaigns from the New York Strand; Warner, Memphis; Strand, Hartford; Strand, Albany; Broadway, Lawrence; Orpheum, Des Moines, Roger Sherman, New Haven; Warner and Merritt, Bridgeport; Capitol, Winchester, Va.; Palace, South Norwalk; Warner, Los Angeles; Tivoli, Frederick, Md., indicated the opinion of managers and publicity men that here was an idea they could get their collective teeth in. And bite on it they did.

Albany Campaign

The campaign essayed in Albany by Leo Rosen, manager of the Strand with the cooperation of Charles Smakwitz, assistant zone manager of Warner Theatres, and his assistant Jerry Atkin, was typical of all of the campaigns and it started with a deal made by the showmen with the Knickerbocker News to cooperate with them in publicizing their "Search for Cinderella." Then they tied the stunt up with the W. M. Whitney & Company department store for a new wardrobe for the contest winner. Arrangements were made with hotels, night clubs and other entertainment facilities to entertain the new Cinderella whose foot would fit the glass slipper. Then the boys really got busy.

With the first publicity breaking in the Knickerbocker News—a general story telling about the entire stunt, including the department store tieup, the entertainment scheduled, and all other details of the contest and reference to the finals to be held on the stage—a trailer appeared on the screen of four local Warner theatres headed "Who Will Be Cinderella Jones for a Day?"

A lobby display was set up in the Strand and duplicated in the other Warner houses in Albany with a 40x60 display in front of all theatres.

Following the first story, which appeared a full week in advance of the showing, the News gave the contest its fullest cooperation; using at least two columns each day, with two columns of art, and continuing for 12 successive days! Personality stories about the winner, what she did as Cinderella for a Day, how she felt about the whole thing, etc., followed for three more days! This was newspaper cooperation showmen dream of.

Radio stations became interested in the event from a human interest point of view and broadcast daily announcements, timed with the newspaper breaks, and both stations eventually interviewed the winner on 15-minute programs.

Store Cooperates

The W. M. Whitney Store, having decided to cooperate on the campaign, did it wholeheartedly and at the campaign's conclusion expressed its complete satisfaction with the results.

The store set up a shoe window display, furnished $250 worth of wearing apparel, placed setpieces and signs throughout the store, used a music window display featuring the Cinderella Waltz Album, devoted time on its own radio broadcasts to the contest, and bought one full-page ad and one quarter-page ad in the News about the event. The smaller display was by arrangement with Warner's home office and showed a large photo of Joan Leslie congratulating the store for its part "in making Albany's Cinderella's Fashion Dreams Come True." This ad ran the day of the finals and urged readers to see Cinderella crowned that night.

Prince Charming Cavalcade

Just when the first newspaper stories were breaking, a modern pumpkin jeep, decorated with signs pertaining to the contest, toured streets, visited plants, schools, state office buildings, etc., in search for Cinderella. The Prince Charming who handled the cavalcade stopped at important, busy spots and police were called to keep order as women took off their shoes to try on the glass slipper. A p.a. system on the jeep kept the large crowds apprised of the happenings. Approximately 2400 women tried on the glass slipper in Albany.

When Cinderella was finally chosen, here is what the Albany publicity crew had mapped out for her, with all of the events covered by Jim Barnes of the Warner Theatre, Memphis, arranged a Cinderella Ball, in cooperation with a local school, to which winner of the local contest was conveyed in a jeep, converted into a Cinderella slipper. After the ball, Cinderella and her court were guests of the theatre at the Hotel Peabody.

Prince Charming Cavalcade aide tries glass slipper on one of the more than 2400 Albany women aspirants in the Cinderella Search held in conjunction with the film's showing at the Strand Theatre. Cavalcade traveled all over city visiting plants, schools, office buildings, etc., creating interest in the film.

More than $500 in merchandise, promoted from 16 merchants, went to the Cinderella Jones of Lawrence, Mass., in the contest conducted by M. Melincoff, Joe Liss and Jack Melincoff of the Warner Theatre. Finals of the contest were held on the stage in front of the 24-sheet poster shown here, with the starting date prominently displayed.

Newspapers Best Bet For Stranger's Exploitation

Concentrated attention paid to feature films in five Westchester County newspapers has been augmented by coverage in a new publication, the White Plains Shopper, by Michael Stranger, manager of Loew's State Theatre, White Plains, on the theory that paid advertising coverage and resultant publicity in the new publication is better insurance of herald distribution than could be obtained otherwise.

In publicizing two double feature shows, "What Next, Corporal Hargrove" and "One Way to Love" and "Masquerade in Mexico" with "Hold That Blonde" Stranger followed up his newspaper coverage with a series of stunts via radio, windows, ballyhoo, etc.

For the "Hargrove-Love" combination Stranger took advantage of a local angle by inviting the parents, brothers and sisters of Marguerite Chapman to the theatre and had the event covered by local newspapers. Radio station WFAS put on a 15-minute quiz program and telephone cards were hung around mouthpieces of booth phones announcing the "right time to see Marguerite Chapman in 'One Way to Love'".

The "Masquerade Blonde" combination show campaign was highlighted by a newspaper contest in which readers were asked to identify stars and names of pictures in five stills which appeared for five consecutive days with guest tickets to winners.

A 15-minute radio quiz program and two full music window displays were other features of the campaign.

Higley and Canaries

A neat exploitation stunt was pulled by Howard Higley, manager of the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, in connection with the theatre's recent presentation of "Enchanted Forest." During the noon hour on Saturday, he persuaded Burton's Canaries, currently playing at a popular cafe, to put on a show in the Allen foyer. Plenty of youngsters were drawn into the theatre by this stunt.—CL.

La Junta Rides Again

"Everybody riding to the theatre on a horse will be admitted free," was the way Bob Wilson, La Junta, Colo., city manager for Fox Intermountain Theatres, plugged the showing of Warners' "San Antonio." Residents of La Junta and the surrounding area took him at his word and the horses nearly stopped traffic on that town's main street.

Show and Store Join To Entertain Juveniles

A local department store and a first run theatre teamed up in Columbus this week to combat juvenile delinquency by giving teen-agers an outlet for their Saturday morning energies.

Loew's Ohio Theatre, together with the Lazarus store, got together to stage a one-hour show by junior and senior high school students. Called the Hi-Jinx, it consisted of all-amateur youngster talent and ran from 10 a.m. to 11 a.m., from the stage of the Ohio with a 30-minute airing over WCOL. More than 1400 teen-agers attended. Lazarus took ads on the theatre pages of the dailies to announce the show, which was staged through the cooperation of Lazarus' advertising director, William Miller, and Arthur Egberts, Loew's Ohio manager.

150 Entries in Saunders' 'Doll Face' Contest

A "Doll Face" contest in which the Bridgeport Post cooperated was used by Matt Saunders of Loew's Poli Theatre, Bridgeport, Conn., to draw attention to the showing of 20th-Fox's "Doll Face." A search was conducted for the local "Doll Face" most proficient in singing and dancing.

Following the audition trials, the finalists appeared on the stage during the evening performance of the picture on opening day. The winner was awarded a week's engagement at a local night club.

COHN'S COLORFUL LOBBY DISPLAY. This unique and colorful lobby display was arranged by M. D. (Babe) Cohn, manager of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, for Warners' "San Antonio." Usherette standing at left gives an idea of the size of the enormous photographic display, which gives onlookers an impression of the massiveness of the film. The cut-out enlargement of Errol Flynn and Alexis Smith also imparts something of the breezy touch of some of the sequences. At far right is a registration book for San Antonio visitors visiting Kansas City who desire to become members of the Deep in the Heart of San Antonio-in-Kansas City Association, an adaptation of the stunt which proved so successful in New York City's opening of the film.

Cinderella Contest Is Widely Accepted

reporters and feature writers of the News:

A suite at the DeWitt Clinton Hotel was promoted for complete use day and night and, believe it or not, upon awakening a maid served Cinderella with breakfast in bed. And the newspapers printed that!

Early in the morning the pumpkin jeep called for Cinderella and took her for a visit to the mayor and then to the Whitney store where she selected her wardrobe, followed about by enormous crowds. She visited the News and then was hostess to the six contest runners-up at luncheon.

After lunch a visit to the hairdresser was followed by radio interviews. Then a tea in the DeWitt Clinton Hotel's Cinderella Suite for the press was followed by dinner with Prince Charming at the Crystal Room. She attended a performance of "Cinderella Jones" at the theatre, was again introduced from the stage, had supper at the Town House which included champagne and all the elaborate trimmings of a state dinner and at the stroke of midnight the orchestra struck up the Cinderella Waltz with the winner and Prince Charming leading on the dance floor.

While campaigns in some of the other cities were not as elaborate as that in Albany, several introduced notes not included there. For instance, winners of contests in towns near New York City were sent on an all-expenses-paid visit to the metropolis where they met Orrin Tucker, whose band was playing at the Strand in conjunction with the film's presentation.

The Warner Theatre, Lawrence, promoted a double truck of advertising from 16 merchants who contributed in excess of $500 of merchandise to the winner. The Roger Sherman Theatre, New Haven, promoted a radio station and a department store to cooperate in picking a winner. The Warner and Merritt theatres, Bridgeport, had to use the city's largest ballroom for contest preliminaries, with finals on the stages. The Capitol in Winchester, Va., worked with the J. C. Penney store which set up a judging booth in the store with gift of a complete ensemble to the winner. In New York City, famous Conover Models whose names are Joan formed the "Cinderella Jones Home Before Mid-Night Club," with Joan Leslie elected national president and one of the models selected president of the New York Chapter. They pledged to be home before midnight, to avoid wolves, to warn each other about other wolves, to always carry mad money and to beware of the long way home. The gag got plenty of space in the New York press.

As reports continue to come into the Warner home office the pattern is repeated. Theatres all over the country are conducting "Search for Cinderella" contests with the cooperation of newspapers, radio, department stores, hotels, night clubs and others anxious and willing to cash in on the "natural" stunt. That the theatres cash in, too, follows in natural sequence.

Magazine Ad Tieup Set For Joan Crawford

An advertising tieup involving national magazines with total reader circulation of more than 130 million, believed to be the biggest promotion of its kind, has been set for Joan Crawford, who recently won the Academy Award for her performance in Warner's "Mildred Pierce."

Deal involves full-page ad in color, with only a few words of commercial copy in the lower right-hand corner of the page and all the remaining space devoted to a head portrait.

The ad already has been appearing in magazines and Sunday magazine supplements.

'Scarlet' Exploitation Tells Who, What, Where, When

That Universal's "Scarlet Street" has been running into trouble with the censors in various spots and that reports of suits, negotiations, etc., beween the producer, distributor, censors, etc., have been reported in an eagerly awaiting press cannot be denied, even if the producer-distributor group would want it denied, what with a free press, screen and freedom of expression involved.

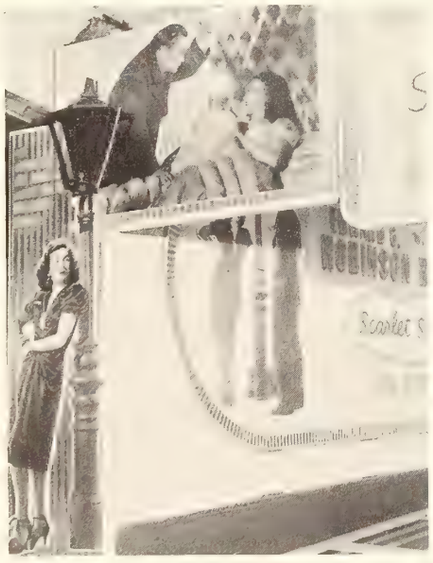
Regardless of the issue of freedom or whatever any of the litigants are most interested in, "Scarlet Street" has become a cause celebre, so to speak, in the motion picture business, and has been reaping the usual good box-office results of that kind of controversy.

Because of this fact the only problem apparently confronting exhibitors who have contracted to show the film is letting the local public know that it is showing. In other words, apparently there is no necessity now to sell the picture through the usual channels of exploitation. Just let them know it's playing at the Blank Theatre and step aside to let them in.

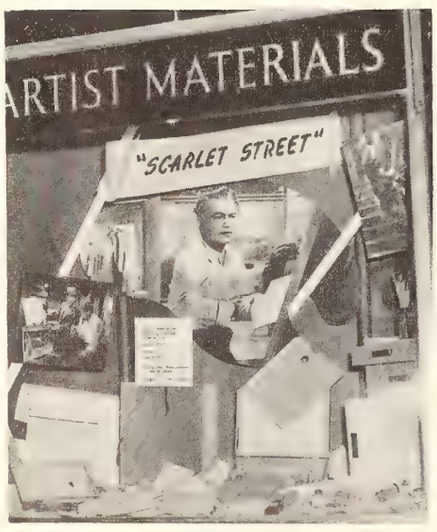
This premise is as much of a fallacy as the one held during the lush days of the war to the same effect, originally attributed to a smart showman, who stated that he could open any store, put in some seats, tell the public he had a show (any show) and then step aside before he was trampled to death.

Showmanship still counts, as evidenced by some of the top showmen of this country who are "selling the picture" in no unmistakable terms in connection with "Scarlet Street."

Witness: The Indiana Theatre, Indianapolis; Two free radio programs on WIRE and WIBC. One propounded questions about films containing the name of a street in titles. The other ran a contest by its Man in the Street asking quesions about the identification and description of streets such as State Street, Chicago; Beale Street, Memphis; Peachtree Street, Atlanta; with tickets to see the film to winners in each contest. The Rialto Theatre, Louisville ran contests on two radio programs on the same questions.



The Regent Theatre, Springfield, Ohio tied up with the Honig Specialty Stores using the transparent plastic raincoat worn by Joan Bennett in the picture. Through the store's outlets all over the country this resulted in window displays and cooperative newspaper ads, and redounded to the film's benefit.



The J. J. Parker Broadway Theatre, Portland, Oregon, really went to town on the film when they arranged for an ordinary street car to carry illuminated signs. The trolley ran the length and breadth of the city and its suburbs carrying the story of "Scarlet Street." Another highlight of the Portland campaign was the decoration of the city's lamp-post signs with overlays just stating "Scarlet Street." That this hopped up the townspeople, indignantly or otherwise cannot be denied. Radio programs on two stations, 5000 "Lazylegs" throwaways and special cut-outs in the theatre itself added impetus to the campaign.

The Manos Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., used station breaks, promoted spot and 15 minute announcements about "Scarlet Street" to sharpen local appetites and built a false front to let the townsfolk know where it was playing. Setpieces, 24-sheet posting, 6000 heralds, a display at the bus terminal, banners on news stands, and want ads in personal columns of the newspapers rounded out the campaign.

New York's Criterion used promoted radio programs galore, a special front, spot art windows containing enlarged stills of Edward G. Robinson as an artist at his easel, and a special 6 x 9-foot illuminated display inside the theatre, well in advance of playdate, using figures from a stock 6-sheet.

Choose Personnel with Eye to Potentialities

hibitor's time to train and to promote to higher jobs.

In addition to training the new employe it is well worth any exhibitor's while to realize that he must not lose sight of his employes' future. The adoption of the seniority system of promotion, providing the employe with the greatest seniority of which he is capable, is bound to build morale in any organization. And good morale is bound to promote the cheerful smile or pleasant good evening that helps to put dollars into the box-office rather than the frown or surly answer from the disgruntled employe that diverts box-office cash to the competitor.

The theatreman's burden can be lessened, his overhead reduced and his organization built to a status of which he may well be proud if he exercises considerable initial care in choosing ushers today for the managers of tomorrow.

New WB Publicity Post For Sam Clark at Studio

Sam Clark, who has been in charge of Warner Bros. field exploitation in the western district for the past several years, has been promoted to advertising and publicity tieups manager in Alex Evelove's studio publicity department. New assignment was set Friday by Mort Blumenstock, vice-president in charge of advertising and publicity, before returning to New York.

Clark has been with Warners for 16 years. He was head of the Chicago press and exploitation bureau for several years before being elevated to head the exploitation forces in the 11 western states.

'Tars, Spars Week' in Cleveland Promotes Film

With 100 Coast Guard officers and men attending the opening performance, and Mayor Thomas Burke declaring "Tars and Spars Week" to honor the 156 birthday of the Coast Guard, The Palace Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, did a gala campaign on the showing of Columbia's "Tars and Spars." The exploitation ideas were thought up by Columbia Exploiteer Sid Zins and RKO Palace Publicist Shirley Fishman.

In addition, a recruiting booth was set up in the lobby and the first recruit to sign up was put on the air, right from the lobby, via a tie-up with radio station WJW.—CL.

DEATH HAS CHANGED OUR MIND!

There is no individual in this industry, whether exhibitor or distributor, who welcomes another drive with its inevitable audience collections.

Why then the Cancer drive?

Recent deaths in our own ranks have brought home to us this frightening fact: one out of eight dies of cancer.

Something must be done about it and the inconvenience of another drive is little enough sacrifice to make.

The funds available for research and treatment have been pitiably small but now an alerted America is doing something about it.

In your hands, in your theatre collection, may lie the answer to cancer. The fight begins. Join!

Studio Production Activity Increasing as Warners Launch Biggest Shooting Schedule Since Start of World War II; MGM, 20th-Fox and Paramount Busy

UNITED ARTISTS Finishes One Picture, Starts Another—Charles R. Rogers' production, "Angel On My Shoulder," starring Paul Muni, Anne Baxter and Claude Rains, finished this week and goes into editing. Andrew Stone finally got under way with his long-postponed "The Bachelor's Daughters," which he is producing, directing and "screenplaying."

Winding is the Mars Film Corp. offering, "The Strange Woman," starring Hedy LaMarr, with George Sanders. This marks the first production effort by Miss LaMarr, who with Hunt Stromberg organized the corporation. Shortly after "The Strange Woman" ends, which should be this week. "Dishonored Lady" is scheduled to go into production. Miss LaMarr will also star in this Ben Hecht scripted version of a Kathleen Cornell play.

George Raft is back on the set of "Mr. Ace and The Queen," allowing retarded production schedules to be resumed. Benedict Bogeaus produces for his own organization. Bogeaus will start "The Short Happy Life of Francis Macomber," a screen adaptation of the Ernest Hemingway story, next month.

PARAMOUNT Shooting Five Films, With Hope Film Set to Roll—This studio continues its normal activity, with a quintet of pictures before the cameras. Particularly noteworthy is the simultaneous shooting of two of the season's most potential b.o. smashes—the Crosby and Hope films. Crosby is making "Welcome Stranger," going into its third week, while Hope starts "Where There's Life" next week.

In its 45th day is "O.S.S.," the Paramount entry in the Office of Strategic Services race. Included in the cast are Alan Ladd, Geraldine Fitzgerald and others. Producer Claude Binyon has "Suddenly It's Spring," Fred MacMurray-Paulette Goddard starrer, ending its fourth week. Mitchell Leisen directs.

"Perils of Pauline," Technicolor special starring Betty Hutton, had a substitution last week in its cast. Sara Allgood replaced Constance Collier because of illness; she plays the part of Miss Hutton's old-time actress friend. Hutton was signed to a new long-termer last week.

Another Paramount picture rolling, bringing the present total to five, is the Pine-Thomas action drama, "Seven Were Saved." The cast includes Richard Denning, Catherine Craig and others.

INTERNATIONAL Has One Picture Going, Readies Another; New Studios Being Built—This organization announced that its next feature will be Edward Small's "Bella Donna," the first picture to be made at International's new quarters at Universal City. Currently shooting at the Samuel Goldwyn studio is "The Dark Mirror," but with Goldwyn planning to oust all units but his own, International marks "Mirror" as its last picture on the Goldwyn lot.

Work started ten days ago for International's new buildings at Universal. "Bella Donna" is scheduled to roll early next month, which means the construction will continue at top speed. Merle Oberon, George Brent, Charles Korvin and Paul Lukas are set for the film. It will be the second picture to be released through the company's newly formed United World Pictures distributing setup.

UNIVERSAL Has Five Films Rolling; Normal Activity Continues—"Fandango" is the longest shooting picture on the Universal lot, with "The Runaround" the most recently started. In all, a quintet of pictures is being made, which means that the studio is at normal production tempo. "Fandago," a Technicolor special, is in its 5th day, under the production of Edward Kaufman. "The Runaround," produced by Joseph Gershenson and starring Rod Cameron and Ella Raines, started on the 14th.

"Lessons in Love," starring George Brent, Lucille Ball and Vera Zorina, is in its fourth week. Howard Benedict is servicing as executive producer. "The Ghost Steps Out," an Abbott-Costello starrer, is also being handled by Gershenson, who is executive producer. "Kelly Is My Name" is starting its third week.

Next month, Universal will have another organization sharing its space, but that unit will be entirely separate other than using buildings it has constructed on Universal's ground. International is the new neighbor.

RKO RADIO Slightly Behind Past Weeks' Terrific Production Pace; Five Features Rolling, Several Finished—RKO is presently shooting five films, one below its past few weeks' record. "Desirable Woman," starring Joan Bennett, finished this week. Also completed was "Child of Divorce," which was given a rush shooting schedule because of the studio's desire to get the picture out for exploitation purposes. Sharyn Moffett, ten-year-old star of the film, went into "What Nancy Wanted," the most recent starter at RKO. John Brahm is directing.

Walt Disney is finishing "Make Mine Music" this week, a feature-length animated picture, with numerous stars doing background singing and playing in the film. Additional scenes are being shot on "A Likely Story," being produced by Richard Berger. "Sinbad The Sailor," RKO's follow-up to its successful "Spanish Main," goes into its 33rd day before the cameras. Stephen Ames produces. "Criminal Court," formerly titled "Manhattan Miracle," is in its third week. Martin Mooney produces and Robert Wise directs.

A big question mark as to starting date is "Honeymoon," which may be started by the time this appears in print. Difficulties arising from the use of Mexican studios for making the picture are causing the delay. Also, Joseph Cotten declined the role originally assigned

MGM and Wallis Unite to Produce 'A-Bomb' Drama

Agreement between Hal Wallis and MGM not to duplicate motion pictures on the atom bomb was reached this week with Wallis agreeing to turn over story material and research for his contemplated "Top Secret" to Metro for its "The Beginning or the End."

The decision was reached when both parties saw that two films on the same subject would result in duplication of effort and loss of box-office appeal. Wallis, who acquires a financial interest in the production which MGM will produce and distribute, will act as consultant and advisor. Norman Taurog will direct.

PRC Again Quiet on Production Front; Several Pictures Planned—PRC has nothing going at the present time, but is currently releasing more pictures for the months of March and April than at any comparable time in its history. It seems that activity zooms at this studio or settles down to a lull.

Current plans call for a musical, "Missouri Hayride," which Josef Berne will both produce and direct. Another picture planned is the Alexander-Stern production of "Queen of Burlesque." Gene Lucas and Al Stewart are writing the tunes for the picture.

PRC bought an original story, "Quebec," from Clarence Green and Russell Rouse, which the company plans to shoot on location in the Canadian city. The company also bought an original by Edgar Ulmer and Franz Rosenwald called "Those We Fear."

Who Picks 'Em?

The section of MPAA Head Eric Johnston's report which got the best play in the New York press is that dealing with the international situation—the foreign markets which (we now should be well aware), are so important to the U. S. industry. Johnston's approach to the higher reaches of this international intercourse via films follows the pattern which had been laid down in identical terms previously by several foreign sales managers of the big companies. The pattern is based on the theory that, since foreign markets can absorb only a limited number of U. S. films, therefore only the "best" pictures should be chosen for export. A little more high-flown aura is given to the idea in Johnston's recommendations, because he would pick the pictures for their quality or cultural values as well as their entertainment.

That does make an interesting and logical line of argument for all kinds of merchandise except the motion picture. In the first place who chooses the pictures?—who is the judge of "quality" that will make a picture eligible for this export honor as well as the monetary rewards garnered by the owner of the merchandise exported?

This industry has had some very smart men associated with it in the past as well as having many most able men active in it right now. We don't recall that anybody either in the past or the present has qualified as a final judge of show values in a picture. Indeed, some of our smartest distribution executives as well as our greatest producers have made some pretty awful guesses as to the box-office potentialities of pictures.

Frankly, we don't think Mr. Johnston or anybody else can pick the pictures that will be enjoyed by the patrons of a theatre in some Swedish small town, for example, any more than he or anybody else can be sure in advance of its public presentation as to the reception a particular picture will receive in the towns and cities of the U. S.

Maybe we are just a chronic theatreman, but for the life of us we can't see why the people of any country can't have the opportunity to see the pictures and decide for themselves which ones they like. The men who buy the pictures for the theatres in those countries will have to learn the tastes of their patrons as nearly as that can be done and take the consequences of profit or loss on their choice of attractions bought from Hollywood. And —from the other highly practical side of it: who makes up to the producer of a picture, decided as not of sufficient "quality" for export, that revenue which he believes is his due from those foreign markets he could sell, if only the U. S. export censor proposed by Johnston would let the picture out of the country?

The Cancer Drive

The more one hears about this terrible killer known as cancer, the more one wonders why greater efforts by the public generally have not been put into the fight against it. Therefore it is heartening to hear that the industry drive for collections during Easter Week is receiving very substantial response from exhibitors who have declared themselves "in" at the invitation to help the cause.

There had been expected a quite widespread opposition to the drive in so far as it required collections by the theatre owners and operators. No doubt there is a very widespread conviction on the part of theatremen that their patrons resent these collections. There is no doubt that the head of the industry's branch of this Cancer Drive, Charles P. Skouras, is well aware of the pitfalls and the difficulties presented by these collection drives. After all, he's a practical theatreman himself. But Skouras, as the head of a large and important circuit, realizes the necessity for responding to such calls as were made upon him by those who have turned to the motion picture theatres for assistance in their fight on the dread Killer known as Cancer. This is one of the responsibilities the industry must assume because of its place and position as a great public institution.

Therefore, the theatreman must look at this practically. He must assist worthwhile public welfare works and movements. Cancer research, treatment and education is most necessary (look at the appalling figures on deaths due to the malady!) and consequently it is up to the theatreman to tackle this job with a good spirit to accomplish the best possible results.

There's a practical press book and campaign material, there's a good cause to serve, so let theatremen pull together in this Cancer Week drive to maintain the record of their industry and that of their own theatres as public institutions.

Exhibitors Themselves to Set TAC Policy, Fabian Declares

Interim Committee Head Says "Screen Freedom" Issue Has No Foundation

While reservations for exhibitors who will convene on St. Louis Monday for the organizational convention of the Theatre Activities Committee continued to pour in, Si Fabian, chairman of the interim TAC committee in New York this week calmly invited the doubtful theatremen to "see for themselves what the Committee proposes to do and to stand up on the convention floor and help shape TAC policies."

Si Fabian

Fabian, who hitherto has refused to enter into controversies as to the merits of TAC on the ground that all programs proposed to date were tentative and that the exhibitors in St. Louis would have the final voice in determining programs and organization, termed as "absurd" the charges made by some exhibitors that TAC would deprive them of "freedom of the screen" or "local autonomy."

Urges 'See for Yourself'

"Every movement that gets under way," he said, is bound to be misunderstood—honestly misunderstood—by many intelligent people. That's why I say come out and see for ourselves. Come out and help shape the Theatre Activities Committee with the knowledge you have gained from experience and with the power of your vote.

"The charge that a plank in the proposed platform—proposed mind you, not adopted—would deprive exhibitors of the freedom of their screens is absurd.

"There is a plank in the proposed platform whereby TAC would pass on the use of the screen for various purposes such as drives. This platform does not say that the individual exhibitor cannot use his screen for a purpose which TAC may not approve. It does mean that the individual exhibtor, faced with pressure from quarters he may not wish to offend, may have the matter referred to TAC and then, if he wishes, may abide by the negative ruling if TAC gives it.

To Meet Pressure Groups

"I see no loss of the screen's freedom in offering a united exhibitor front against pressure groups which might be too powerful for one exhibitor.

"Again there is a TAC platform which would study legislation and watch tax measures.

"There certainly is no loss of 'local autonomy' in having quick accurate information on tax measures in other sections of the country when such a measure may creep up in your own territory. There is no loss in having the legislatures carefully watched against sneak measures which might harm the exhibitor. And after all, the final action is up to the exhibitor himself.

"Also there is the matter of drives. This is a hot subject and one which we may wish to avoid. But again I believe that a united front to cooperate or to withstand pressure is highly desirable.

"But the most important point to bear in mind is: This platform is not adopted. It is only proposed. The exhibitors who are in St. Louis Monday and Tuesday can have their say and their say will determine the final outcome. Everything that will be done will be done by the democratic process of debate and the vote. There is none of us who are on the interim organizing committee who would want it any other way."

Governor on Speaker's List

Speakers at the convention will include Missouri's Governor Phil Donnelly, Mayor Aloys Kaufman of St. Louis, Interstate President Karl Hoblitzelle, Arthur L. Mayer, managing director, the Rialto, New York and former World War II Red Cross Commissioner, and Walter L. Morris who operated the theatres in the top secret Oak Ridge, Tenn. compound where the atom bomb was made.

TAC interim secretary Walter Brown has been in St. Louis with his staff since Thursday. Scheduled to arrive before Sunday were Fabian, Constitution Committee Chairman William F. Crockett, General Arrangement Chairman Ted R. Gamble. They will confer with Harry S. Arthur of St. Louis who heads the arrangements committee.

St. Louis exhibitors will tender the visitors a luncheon on April 1 and on April 2 there will be a dinner honoring the first TAC officers.

All convention sessions will be held in the Regency Room of the Chase Hotel.

'Local Autonomy' Under TAC Impossible—PCCITO

The Pacific Coast Conference of Independent Theatre Owners this week declared that it would not attend the organization convention of the Theatre Activities Committee in St. Louis and that a poll of its members showed that they feared TAC might deprive them of "local autonomy."

A PCCITO spokesman claimed that TAC would "take away from them (exhibitors) all right to individually represent themselves to all departments of the United States government."

Adopt 20 New Standards

Standardization of motion picture techniques is further advanced by the adoption, this week, of twenty new standards, all formally approved by joint action of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, the American Standards Association, and the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

Among those adopted are specifications for positioning the picture and sound record on 35-mm. film. A number of others relate to 16-mm. projection.

Variety Clubs Meet May 15

Plans for the Variety Club Humanitarian Award dinner which will be held in connection with the convention of Variety Club of America in New York at the Astor Hotel from May 15 to May 18, were taking shape this week Chairman Si Fabian announced.

The dinner, an annual event of the Club's conventions, honors an outstanding personality for his humanitarian work. Past awards have been made to Sir Alexander Flemming, former secretary of state and Nobel prize winner Cordell Hull, Boys' Town Father Flannagan, Martha Berry, Tuskegee's George Washington Carver and Sister Elizabeth Kenny.

Advance reservations for the convention itself indicate a heavy attendance National Chief Barker R. J. O'Donnell declared from Dallas. O'Donnell will arrive in New York during April to take over the final phases of the pre-convention operations.

Blank, Max Cohen Among Cancer Drive Appointees

Among appointees named this week as area chairmen for the Cancer Drive are A. H. Blank, veteran theatreman and head of Tri-States Theatre Corp., of Des Moines, as Iowa State Chairman. After official announcement of his appointment, Blank declared that he would invite every exhibitor in Iowa to volunteer to serve as chairmen of the drive in their respective communities.

Other appointments announced this week included that of N. D. Dipson to serve as Buffalo area chairman; S. J. Ullman as chairman for Albany, and Max A. Cohen, president of Cinema Circuit, as Metropolitan New York Area Chairman.

Hynes Sets Program for '24-Hour Club' Reception

Bernard J. Hynes, assistant national campaign director for the film industry Red Cross Week, left for Washington Wednesday to finalize plans for the reception on May 9 by President Truman of the winners in the "24-Hour Club" competition for exhibitors and film salesmen in the Red Cross drive completed Tuesday. The winners will be named April 26.

National headquarters for the campaign in New York declared on Wednesday night that it was too early to give estimates of the results that will be run up by the industry in the 1946 Red Cross drive, but that from all indications and the number of theatres participating during the week March 20 through 26, a huge fund will be turned over to the Red Cross by the industry as a result of the public's response to showmanship efforts and collections in the motion picture theatres.

Strike Shuts All But 2 Detroit Exchanges

Teamters Back at Work; Mail Deliveries Continue To Service All Theatres

What IATSE offices in New York decared to be unauthorized strike of film handlers plus the wage demands of the building service employes had combined this week to close down all but two of Detroit's major exchanges.

Meanwhile 61 suburban theatres, which had closed down during the early part of the strike due to film shortage, were operating full blast again as film was being shipped into the territory by mail from Chicago and other exchange areas.

Continuing to operate while a confused labor picture grew even more confused were Paramount and 20th Century-Fox, whose employes did not walk out with the majority of the film handlers but had remained at work throughout the strike under an IATSE negotiated contract.

Other exchanges were closed down and declared they would not open until the strike was settled in order to avoid trouble. The strikers promptly termed this action a lockout. The AFL teamsters' union which had been supporting the striking film handlers reportedly had pulled their support and were back at work.

The labor picture here has been confused from the start by the elements which became involved in it. The New York offices of the IATSE claim they had negotiated a contract for the film handlers with all exchanges providing for increases in pay. The majority of the local union —estimated to be at some 130 employes—balked at the wage scales and walked out of the exchanges.

At the same time the teamsters' local union there championed the cause of the film handlers and rumors were that the teamsters would charter the striking workers despite the fact that the IATSE holds an AFL charter for this field.

Apparently the teamsters' national organization warned their local union to keep hands off and at the same time the IATSE national offices reached some agreement with the local film handlers who returned to work—for half a day.

The truce broke down when the building service employes, demanding higher wages, walked out of the exchanges and threw a picket line around the place. The recently-returned film handlers refused to cross the picket line and the exchanges affected closed down.

Informed sources said the IATSE disapproved of the local film handlers' strike and the situation had risen because the majority of the local union felt the IATSE had not negotiated a large enough wage raise for the Detroit situation. It was pointed out that IATSE had been hampered in the past by war wage regulations and that it has been negotiating and slowly getting retroactive raises in all localities. Detroit's front office workers, also an IATSE local, recently negotiated a pay raise contract and did not walk out with the film handlers.

No Hope, Just Taxes

Hope for any cut in the provincial amusement tax of Alberta went glimmering this week as the provincial treasurer reported an anticipated deficit of nearly four millions and promised that while there would be no new taxes, there would also be no tax reductions. Alberta province has a 10 per cent tax, which added to the Canadian 20 per cent tax brings the total up to 30 per cent.

IATSE May Reject Arbitration

Stating bluntly that the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes would not tolerate any plans for arbitration of jurisdictional disputes which would deprive it of the right to determine its own jurisdiction, IATSE President Richard F. Walsh this week indicated that his organization might not accept the arbitration proposal laid down by MPAA Vice-President Byron Price.

Walsh did not say his organization was opposed to arbitration but apparently insists that the IATSE must have the right to determine what is within its jurisdiction. (Union observers pointed out that if precedent were established that an outside body could determine jurisdictions, the field of a labor organization might be fenced in. They said that IATSE had grown in strength by pursuing a policy of moving in on fields other than stagehands or projectionists, such as white collar workers, etc.)

Walsh's views reflected remarks which had been previously made on the coast. There, a spokesman for the IATSE told Showmen's Trade Review that IATSE would not "allow the Price plan to arbitrate away what we have settled."

The Conference of Studio Unions, which has locked horns with the IATSE on several occasions, declared that the Price plan was similar to that which the Conference had advocated and seemed pleased with the idea. However, the CSU charged that an "unholy alliance" existed between the producers and the IATSE.

Price had made public a plan which he said had been worked out in conference for submission of jurisdictional disputes to arbitration if both sides could not get together within four hours. No strikes were to be called during the arbitration period.

UN In Middle of Jurisdictional Row Between Film and Video Cameramen

UNO got a first hand study of labor jurisdictional disputes, American style, this week as Local 52 of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, IATSE-AFL threatened to pull the newsreel cameramen off the conference coverage if Local 1212 of the AFL International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers attempted to shoot scenes of the meetings for use over CBS television station CBT.

"Make no mistake about it," Local 52 Business Agent Sal J. Scappa said, "if the IBEW men go into that newsreel booth, our men come out. This is not a jurisdictional fight like the papers said. It's an attempt at a grab. The IBEW is trying to move in on us. We're motion picture men and we're going to take the motion pictures."

The only television station involved at the moment is CWT which is off the air while its equipment gets changed for a frequency switch. ABC is using the photographic service of Emerson-Yorke which photographs on 35-mm. and which employs IATSE cameramen.

The national IATSE offices in New York said the matter was between Local 52 and Local 1212 and that it had not been asked to intervene. However, a spokesman for Local 1212 said an attempt was being made to get IATSE national president Richard F. Walsh and IBEW national president Ed J. Brown to confer on the matter and to invite AFL president William Green to arbitrate.

The IBEW claimed that it had organized the television field several years ago after the IATSE had rejected it and that the present IATSE attitude was an attempt to move in on the IBEW. It further claimed that the AFL issued IBEW charter grants it the privilege to photograph and project movies for non-theatrical use.

Hitherto CBT, whose studio crews are IBEW members, has been using them to photograph news events on 16-mm. for use in television. The UNO had set up two booths in its conference hall—one for the newsreels which are pooling their efforts because the booth will allow only one cameraman at a time; the second for televising.

IATSE refused to let its men work if the IBEW men were in the television booth and threatens the moment an IBEW man enters the booth that they will call out the newsreel photographers. The UNO employs no cameramen.

AFL Studies Claims Of Rival Publicists

While AFL Representative Tom Randall was making a study of conflicting claims between the Screen Publicists' Guild and the recently IATSE-chartered Motion Picture Studio Publicists' Association Local 798 to determine which should receive American Federation of Labor recognition, Hollywood's jurisdictional arguments continued in full swing this week.

The SPG claims that they are the bargaining agents for the publicists and says that most of the 130 members of the MPSP are actually paying dues in two organizations and belong to SPG as well as MPSP. MPSP, with strong membership in 20th Century-Fox and MGM studios, retorts that it now has the majority of the screen publicists in its ranks and therefore is entitled to represent the profession. Both groups say they favor a National Labor Relations Board election.

Stagehands Reject Deal For $55; Want More

St. Louis faced continued labor controversy in its theatres as the Theatrical Brotherhood, Local 6, IATSE, presented new demands to the theatre operators here.

The new demands call for an increase of pay from $75 to $86.25 weekly; at least one stagehand to be employed in all of the city's 110 motion picture houses and two weeks' annual vacation with pay.

No time was set for meeting the demands but the union is understood to have told exhibitors it would like an answer in two weeks.

Previously the union was reported to have reached an oral agreement with the St. Louis Amusement Company whereby it would pay only $55 weekly to stagehands in their smaller houses and, in addition, would employ one stage hand in 26 others at a pay increase from $75 to $80 weekly for a six-year period.

Reject Jackson Park Rehearing

Six major distributors and two theatre operating chains faced a suit for $200,000 additional damages in Chicago's Jackson Park Theatre case this week as the United States Supreme Court in Washington, rejected a plea for a rehearing on the original $360,000 damage case.

Jackson Park attorneys said they would seek the additional amount to cover alleged losses in profits on behalf of their client from the period of July 27, 1942 to the present, which was not covered in the first suit.

The defendants had no comment.

In a plea for a rehearing, one of the defendants—Balaban and Katz—had stressed a claim:

That the plea upon which the damages were based was incomplete in that it did not show whether the Jackson Park Theatre would have made more or less money had it been able to buy first runs for the zone in an open market against the rival circuit affiliated Maryland Theatre.

That the figures comparing profits for a given period with lessened profits for another period presented by Jackson Park had failed to allow for the fact that during the period showing the higher profit Bank Night had been in effect while during the period showing a lessened profit, there had been no Bank Night.

Originally the Jackson Park Theatre had sued under the Sherman Act in federal court claim in that it had lost over $120,000 when the Maryland went double bill and the Jackson Park could no longer get first runs in that zone. It charged conspiracy in this connection. The federal court awarded damages which the judge raised to $360,000 under the triple damage clause of the Sherman Act. Defendants—B&K, RKO, Warner Bros. Picture and Theatres, Loew's, 20th Century-Fox, Vitagraph, Inc., and Paramount then appealed to the circuit court which reversed the lower court. The Supreme Court upheld the lower court and affirmed the damage judgment.

Industry Obligated to Keep Public Informed, Johnston Tells MPAA

The motion picture industry has an obligation to keep press and public posted with facts about itself, President Eric Johnston told the Motion Picture Association of America at its annual meeting in New York Monday (25).

Eric Johnston

Johnston, who was re-elected, also emphasized in his report:

Self restraint in the matter of film exports so as not to glut the foreign markets.

Free communications among nations by press, radio and pictures.

A correct motion picture interpretation of American life and democracy. (Assistant Secretary of State William Benton last week urged the same thing.)

Better labor relations, and a study of the subject of seasonal employment "to secure maximum job continuity."

"Self discipline."

Discussing the export of films, Johnston's report stated that the accumulation of American films productions "which could not be shown in the Axis-controlled countries," plus the capacity of foreign markets to absorb motion pictures, presented a problem.

"For this reason," he reported, "and also to prevent restrictive measures by foreign governments, I think we would be wise to decide voluntarily to limit our exports to a reasonable number of pictures for such re-opened markets. . . .

"We must see to it that the films we export give no reasonable offense to the nationals of foreign countries. We must make certain that the American way of life is faithfully portrayed upon the world's screens. . . .

"I know from personal experience that in many countries the only America the people are acquainted with is the America of the motion picture. Their attitude towards America and toward the democratic ideals for which America stands, is conditioned by the view we give them of ourselves. That view need only be honest and fair in order to be attractive. . . .

"The most important advantage enjoyed by American motion pictures in the world market is the simple fact that people everywhere like them. . . .

Johnston reported that restrictive measures were motivated by national pride, dollar exchange and the fact that while entertaining people abroad, American pictures advertised American products. . . .

Pleading for a free interchange of ideas, the MPPA president said:

". . . the free interchange of ideas is even more important than the free interchange of goods. There must be no obstacles to the transit of media of communication. Men must have free access to the minds and hearts of one another even more than they must have free access to natural resources.

"The industry has a responsibility to the public for the dissemination of factual information on motion pictures and industry operations. Only in this way can public opinion be reliably informed about our business. If we expect the public and the press to know us as we really are, we must supply them with reliable information about ourselves."

Reelected with Johnston were the following officers: Joseph I. Breen, Francis S. Harmon, Byron Price, Carl E. Milliken, George Borthwick, F. W. DuVall, James S. Howie.

Directors reelected were: Barney Balaban, Nate J. Blumberg, George Borthwick, Jack Cohn, Cecil B. De Mille, E. W. Hammons, E. B. Hatrick, Joseph H. Hazen, Robert W. Perkins, Hal E. Roach, Nicholas M. Schenck, Spyros P. Skouras, Albert Warner. Elected to replace RKO board chairman N. Peter Rathvon was RKO president Ned Depinet.

Foreign Film Trade Jockeying Continues

Foreign fields in some cases looked slightly greener this week as problems of distribution in the European and Asiatic market continued stormy but in at least two places showed a glimmer of hope for peaceful trading.

In Singapore the confused situation which arose when American contracts were canceled and exhibitors were ordered to devote 10 per cent or more of their playing time to British product seemed to be clearing. The order preventing negotiation of any new contracts with American distributors during the next 6 months still is in effect, but informed sources seemed to think the whole situation could be rectified.

The trouble apparently arose when commanders of troops in and around Singapore permitted native civilians to attend showings of American pictures which were being distributed for the entertainment of the military only.

In Italy where American producers had at first balked at a quota of 16 films each, the situation reversed itself when the eight major companies voluntarily agreed to the restriction when they reportedly understood that this was to mean 16 feature subjects, not the total of prints involved.

In Holland the determination of American distributors to fight back after the Bioscoop Bond booking combine refused to let American films get playing time, apparently was meeting with equally determined opposition on the part of the Bond.

That organization had previously notified its members that the showing of films distributed by any other agency than it was forbidden.

License Fees Up

Meanwhile the Motion Picture Association of America in its annual report discussed some of the difficulties which had been met in the foreign field. These were:

(In Spain there had been an increase of $90 to $1,100 for the average feature. Australia would put a ceiling on film rentals.)

Internal taxes which were really discriminatory because they hit at American product.

Quota laws and discriminatory taxes on theatres playing foreign films.

Taxes on the distributors share of the box-office take (which hits directly at American films playing percentage.)

Nationalization of film industries in foreign countries. (In Czechoslovakia, attempts are being made to book American product directly into the monopoly's circuits.)

MGM to Produce Newsreel For Distribution Abroad

MGM will produce a newsreel for foreign use which can be built up for regional coverage in various countries, Arthur M. Loew, president of Loew's International announced.

The new reel to be known as "Metro News" will not supplant "News of the Day" and will not play in the United States or Canada, though scenes from it will be incorporated into "News of the Day," Loew said. To be filmed on both 16 and 35 mm., the news will be produced in several editions, each designed to cover a major section of the globe. Special clips of local stories will be added for various countries and the sound track re-recorded in the language of the countries.

Ponder New Ban

Theatremen this week puzzled with no little concern over the latest government building restrictions announced Tuesday by the Civilian Production Administration in Washington. Pending further clarification of the order and the position to be taken on many of its clauses by legal experts of the CPA, exhibitors pondered the various interpretations placed on the text of the new order restricting commercial building to give high priority to low-cost homes and public housing for veterans.

In general the industry was willing to see this priority given to housing and agreeable to measures to forward it, however some theatremen declared that in certain sections the theatre situation itself might be considered critical. Right at the moment of the greatest box-office returns the industry has known, the entire nation is faced with inadequate theatres due to a slow-down in construction and renovating which began with the depression and was continued by compulsion during the war.

Construction Slowed as Britons Buy Materials

Practically all theatre building and planning for theatre construction has come to a dead stop in Montreal, following the pattern in existence elsewhere since the government at Ottawa has hinted it was formulating a policy of "housing first."

Details of the plan have not been released but prospective theatre builders complain that they are paying the piper for an odd situation which exists here. Canada actually suffers from no scarcity of materials, but the snag is that there are no price ceilings on these materials, when sold outside the Dominion. Thus English firms may purchase Canadian materials which are not available to Canadians because the manufacturers are able to realize greater profits by export.

In Montreal, reports are to the effect that markets exist where various supplies can be obtained—for a price. Small scale building operations can be carried out but theater builders and other types of larger scale construction are under a strict official eye.

Alexander to Handle Tolerance Film Series

Alexander Film Company of Colorado Springs, Col., will distribute the 13 "One Nation Indivisible" series of one-minute motion pictures preaching racial and religious tolerance, Alexander's Monroe Heath announced this week. The series, released by the Institute of American Democracy, Inc., will seek sponsorship through film advertising.

MGM to Tradeshow 5

MGM this week announced five more national trade showings for April and May. They are: April 19, "Boys' Ranch" and, all territories excepting Los Angeles and New York, "The Green Years." April 29, "Two Smart People," "Little Mr. Jim." May 6, "Blue Sierra" (Technicolor).

Considerable Theatre Work Seen Possible Under Order

Structures Under Way May Continue; Wide Latitude In Repair, Replacements

By AARON NADELL
Technical Editor

Considerable theatre construction, remodeling and renovation appear to be permitted under the terms of the government's new building ban, as indicated by an analysis of its terms.

"New construction activities will be permitted to go forward side by side with veterans' housing," the government order stresses.

Completely exempt from the new order are repainting, repapering, and installing repair or replacement parts in existing equipment, provided only that no change is made in the building itself.

Also exempt is installation of new equipment, provided it is not attached to and used as part of the building, or so attached to the building that it cannot be removed without suffering injury.

Thus it would appear that new projection and sound equipment, chairs, carpets and furnishings of all kinds remain outside the new order, on the single condition that they are not so installed as to be irremovable. Apparently a carpet that is tacked down is permitted; if cemented down, it is not.

A new marquee might be banned as being attached to and part of the building, but the wording of the government's announcement should exempt a new marquee sign, unless the sign is so attached that it cannot be removed without suffering injury.

New air conditioning equipment would seem to be wholly exempt from the order, but new ducts for it might come under the ruling as being part of the building structure.

Also completely exempt is any work whatever costing not more than $1,000 per job. Thus if new air conditioning machinery is installed, the duct-work also would be exempt if it cost less than that sum.

There is no limit to the number of different $1,000 jobs the theatre may undertake, except that more expensive work (if of a kind that comes under the ban) cannot be sub-divided into $1,000 contracts for the purpose of evasion, not even by spreading out the operation over a period of time.

Also exempt is new construction actually under way when the order was issued. The terms defining new construction are specific and definite. They indicate that if a wall has been partly torn down, or an excavation has been partly dug, and even one stone or brick or beam of the new permanent structure has been installed, the entire work can be finished. But if a wall has been totally taken down or an excavation completely dug, and no single item of the new permanent structure put into place, then everything will have to remain as is.

Work not permitted by the new order can be authorized by application to the local office of the Civilian Production Authority. Seventy-one such offices are to be set up throughout the country. Each will be assisted by an advisory committee consisting of prominent local citizens. The decisions of these committees are not final, but subject to appeal. However, it would appear that if the community, as represented by its prominent citizens, wants and approves a new theatre or renovation of an existing one, chances of winning an authorization would seem to be fairly good. If the advisory committee says "No," appeal still is possible, but—what do you think?

$12,700,000 Fox Profit

Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation (including National Theatres Corporation and the Roxy Theatre, Inc.), showed an estimated net profit of $12,700,000 for the 52-week period ending Dec. 29, 1945, a tentative report released by the company this week showed. This is equivalent after all deductions of $5.27 a share on common stock outstanding at the close of the period.

Sanger Urges More Small Houses to Replace Huge No-Stage-Show Theatres

Situations in which stage shows are not used might find it advantageous to replace their huge theatres with several smaller houses offering the same total seating capacity with a more intimate auditorium when bans against theatre construction are lifted, Architest John B. Sanger said in New York this week.

Sanger is a member of the firm of Whitehead, Sanger and Hoidge, successor to Thomas Lamb Associates who pioneered in designing the first large motion picture theatres and have constructed houses in various sections of the world.

"If there is no stage show—and there are many situations where there are none," Sanger said, "the reason for a very large theatre disappears. From the viewpoint of straight film presentation, I believe several smaller houses would be better. As an example, let us assume a community has a theatre seating almost six thousand people. Three theatres, next to each other if the geographical demands of the amusement section require it, could offer the same total of seats with more intimate auditoriums whose seats would be nearer the screens and whose atmosphere would be more homey. It is possible that the three houses could all be playing the same picture.

"Or in situations where there is too much traffic congestion, the three houses could be set up to serve different sections of the downtown area and thereby relieve some of that congestion.

"Naturally there may be some objections to this from the operating viewpoint, but I think it is sound from the architectural viewpoint.

"In connection with the subject of congestion, the question of traffic and getting to places, which is something to be considered now in almost every community, will, in my estimation, increase the influence of the neighborhood theatre. I think we will see finer neighborhood theatres in the future just as I think there is a substantial amount of people who are tired of traveling to the show and standing in line after they get there to see it.

"All this of course will have to wait on the removal of construction restrictions.

Sanger visualized the theatre of the next few years as in good taste, with emphasis on simplicity and careful decoration.

16mm. Makes Debut in Commercial Theatre

Hollywood this week was talking and talking fast about the new 16-mm. invasion of the commercial exhibition field, which got under way here last week when Planet Pictures put on a ballyhoo opening of the 16-mm. "The People's Choice" at the Marcal Theatre.

Planet, which says it has organized a world-wide distribution set up, has plans for other productions, includes "Ramona" and "Nonquassi," a feature in color produced in South Africa. The company hopes to invade educational, religious and industrial fields with specially produced pictures in 16-mm. and reports that it has already signed up with the Navy Department for its product as well as for televising 16-mm. over NBC.

The world premiere here of the first venture into a commercial theatre got off with all the fanfare of the usual Hollywood opening. Floodlights, a radio program aired before the show started and fancy-priced tickets were all part of the ballyhoo. The feature, however, did not hold the audience, the photography was not clear and the scripting was poor. Drew Kennedy played the lead and the support came from such performers as George Meeker, Ernie Adams, Rex Lease, Fred Kelsey, John Merton and Louise Arthur. Sound reproduction and color were excellent. The 16-mm. newsreel shown on the same program to the premiere audience, which crowded the house, was good.—J.G.

Gentlemen, the Draymah

Six glamorous Goldwyn Girls and six serious-minded young gentlemen from the School of the Drama at Yale University will get together for esthetic and artistic reasons only in the University Theatre at New Haven on April 16. Reason: to hold a two hour round table discussion which, a Goldwyn announcement in perfect English says, will "deal with the contrasts and similarities of approach and training for a career in the legitimate theatres as opposed to a career in motion picture."

The girls are reportedly reading up on "Oedipus Rex" and "Phedre"; the gentlemen plan to see a motion picture entitled "The Kid From Brooklyn" which is associated in some way or other with the name of Goldwyn.

Certain as Taxes

Internal Revenue agents are reported interested in several fraud suits pending against exhibitors for allegedly holding out on the distributors when reporting receipts on percentage pictures, it was learned in Washington this week.

It's not that the Department is morally wroth against the poor distributor possibly getting gypped. It wants to make sure that regardless of what happened, Uncle Sam got his tax share of the actual income.

Paramount Studio Changes To New Recording Device

Paramount's Academy Award dial-controlled sound channel lineup and test circuit will be used on all future Paramount pictures, the studio in Hollywood announced this week.

The new device, which does all lineup, testing and trouble shooting by the turn of a single dial and which sets up, step by step, all needed circuit and mastering combinations, will save as much as 20 minutes of shooting time in a working day, Paramount claimed. It reportedly reduces the margin for error considerably.

Parran Welcomes Power of Screen in Drive

Sees Theatres in Vital Role to "Drive Cancer Back Into the Darkness"

Overwhelming response of theatremen to voluntary support of the cancer drive has proved that anticipated opposition to this campaign was absolutely without foundation, it was declared at national headquarters in New York at midweek, when announcement was made that acceptances have been pouring in from exhibitors at the rate of hundreds per day since the beginning of the week.

Dr. Thomas Parran, Surgeon-General U. S. Public Health Service, declared that theatremen can play a key role in the fight to change the grim statistic which tells humanity that one out of every seven people die from cancer. The statement was sent by Dr. Parran through the National Committee of the Motion Picture Division of the American Cancer Society in connection with the drive in which exhibitors have been invited to participate during the week April 21-28.

The Surgeon-General addressed his message directly to theatre owners, in the following terms:

"It is with a deep respect for the power of the motion pictures as a medium of mass education that this letter is written to you in connection with the campaign of the American Cancer Society.

"The need is urgent for disseminating accurate information about cancer. Although we still have much to earn about the cause, detection, and treatments of cancer, nevertheless, even with our present knowledge thousands of lives would be saved if more people would learn to recognize the danger signals and seek treatment when the chances of recovery are best.

"An increased public awareness of the cancer problem is playing a vital role in hastening progress in the battle against the disease. . . .

"Statistics, Mr. Exhibitor, confront you at every turn. You would like to avoid them, but in doing so you'd have no business. Here's one that you might take right to heart. Satistics released by the American Cancer Society tell you that under the present grim condition of the malignant disease, one out of every seven of the patrons that you meet at your door—and this includes children as well—is scheduled to die of cancer. Many of them very soon.

"But that statistics needn't be permanent. You can help make it one in eight, or one in twenty, or one in a hundred. Your participation in the cash collection scheduled for all performances during the Motion Picture Division of the American Cancer Society's funds drive, starting April 21st, will help bring in the vital cash that will drive cancer back into the darkness from whence it came."

Campaign Book Available

There are more than 100 Cancer local chapters in the country, and each of these will use the industry's campaign book as a guide for cooperation with exhibitors in the Easter Week drive, it has been announced by Monroe Greenthal, publicity director of the campaign.

Suggest 6-Point Plan for Full-Scale Participation

Theatre activities which are recommended for a full-scale participation in the drive are:

Booking and using on the screen the special trailer.

Collection arrangements which include provision for lights up; organization of the Girl Scouts or other local units to make collections.

Representations to the Mayor of the town or city to issue a special proclamation.

Use of advertising slugs in theatre advertising.

CHARLES P. SKOURAS

Invites Showmen To Join

In this campaign against cancer, the most dreaded disease of our time, no one of us is, or can afford to be, disinterested. It affects us all personally and collectively. Many of the most prominent and beloved members of our industry have been stricken by it. It is therefore for our own personal protection as well as the welfare of the people who make up our vast audiences that we serve unstintingly, unselfishly, and wholeheartedly in this campaign to help wipe out cancer — the frightful scourge of millions. In a marked degree, men and women of the industry, much of this great responsibility lies in our hands. I look forward with eager hope to your acceptance of our invitation to participate.

Committee Stresses Volunteer System

Charles P. Skouras, Chairman of the Motion Picture Division of The American Cancer Society, and members of his national committee have stressed the fact that theatres participating in the drive to collect funds during the Week April 21-28 will be doing so on a wholly voluntary basis.

The national committee has conducted a vigorous campaign to place before theatremen the vital facts(and they comprise a grim picture of suffering and death that might be reduced by wholehearted assistance from all groups and individuals everywhere) and then inviting the theatremen to join the fight solely out of a desire to assist in a work that is necessary to meet the terrible challenge of cancer.

Among the starkly real facts which have been laid before the industry by Skouras and his committee is the statistic that nearly 3,400 Americans will die of cancer during the one week set aside for the motion picture participation in the American Cancer Society's campaign.

These facts will be available to the theatres for publication in order that people generally may be informed of the tremendous toll taken by cancer every minute of the day.

So far the national committee has information of large numbers of theatres, both circuit and individually operated houses, which will put on full-edged drives—using publicity, screening the trailer and taking up collections.

All of the film distributors have pledged full support to the campaign through the agency of the permanent charity unit of which Charles M. Reagan, vice-president and distribution chief of Paramount, is the national chairman. This permanent unit has chairmen in each of the exchange territories and working with them are the branch managers, sales and office personnel of the exchanges of all companies.

Tracy Stars in Trailer

Spencer Tracy is the star of a dramatic short entitled "We Can Do It," which is to be available free to theatres from coast to coast during the Cancer Week Drive.

Theatres volunteering to assist in the campaign to raise $12 million by taking up collections during the week April 21-28, will have the assistance of many local organizations and groups. These include the Girl Scouts of America to make appearances in detachments at the theatres for special events and also to take up the collections, and members of local American Cancer Society groups.

PRESS SHEET

A thoro-going press sheet, practical and idea-inspiring, is being mailed to all theatremen, telling how the campaign is being conducted and how funds are to be remitted. National Screen will stock a supply for those who need more than one.

ONE SHEET

Free, colorful one-sheets will be included in the press-book sent to all exhibitors. Put it up in your lobby or foyer.

An inhuman enemy will kill 17,000,000 Americans now living unless we do something about it. It is absolutely vital that we avert this massive tragedy.

The enemy is cancer.

Cancer is a personal threat to every single one of us. There is one chance in eight that you yourself will be its victim—yes, one chance in six, if you are past 45. Many you know and love will develop this dread disease and, unless helped in time, die of it.

Our Vital Hope

At present three people die every 10 minutes of cancer. Did you know that one of these three can be saved? When detected early enough, and treated effectively, at least 30 to 50% of cancer cases CAN BE CURED. That is a wonderful message of hope.

To save those who now die needlessly, and to increase the number who can be saved, we must do these three vital things:

1. Spread knowledge everywhere of the danger signals of cancer and urge people to consult a doctor in time to be saved.

2. Provide far more and much better hospital facilities for prevention, diagnosis and treatment of cancer.

3. Expand widely the scientific research attack which will lead to more effective treatment and possibly even the elimination of cancer.

We must organize to do these three things as thoroughly and effectively as scientists were organized to solve the problem of the atomic bomb. The American Cancer Society has developed a program to do this.

NATIONAL NEWSREEL

Stricter Censorship

Motion picture and radio censorship which aims at controlling propaganda and public information seemed in store for Quebec this week as it became known that the provincial government intends to set up a Department of Youth and Social Welfare. The terms of the new bill, which seems certain of support in Parliament indicate much stricter censorship than hitherto, its opponents say.

The Personal Slant

RKO President N. Peter Rathvon was back in Hollywood this week after a visit to New York. While there he attended a luncheon in his honor tendered by Ned Depinet.

Marvin L. Faris has joined the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers as assistant to President Donald M. Nelson. Recently discharged from the Navy, Faris, prior to that, had been with the Office of Scientific Research and Development.

RKO's Foreign Distribution Vice-President Phil Reisman and the same company's treasurer, William Clark, have been elected to the Board of Directors. Other changes are Norman Freeman as assistant secretary and Malcolm Kingsberg, who retired from the directorate to devote full time to his new post of theatre operating head.

George Scher, who served five years in the Army, is Arnold Pressburger's new eastern press representative.

United Artists President Edward C. Raftery will leave for the Coast Monday to study studio space limitation problems. The company meanwhile has tabled production plans until a clear definition of the problem can be made.

Ted Gamble, who did a bang-up job as national director for the Treasury's War Finance Department, and his assistant on the job Bob Coyne, were feasted at a special meal in New York Wednesday at the Metropolitan club. The committee which arranged everything from antipasto to after dinner speaking comprised Clarence Pritchard of Warners, Guy Emerson of Bankers' Trust and Frederick W. Gehle of Chase National Bank, all of whom served with Gamble and Coyne on the War Finance Committee. Industryites attending included Si Fabian, Oscar Doob, Major L. E. Thompson, Malcolm Kingsberg, James Sauter and Harry Mandel.

Republic's Robert V. Newman arrived in New York this week to confer with the home office. Newman is executive assistant to Vice-President Allan Wilson.

A. M. Botsford, ex-newspaperman who was head of Paramount's New York story department, ad and publicity head for 20th Century-Fox and has held various advertising executive jobs, will join United Artists Monday (1) as assistant to Producer Benedict Bogeaus.

No Kentucky Censorship

Proposed state censorship for Kentucky failed last week when the General Assembly refused to take action on the bill proposed by Congressman Sylvester Phillips.

Says Strict 'Clean Shows' Rule is Best Offense Against Censor Menace

Theatremen must be increasingly vigilant to insure that their theatres are regarded as wholesome influences in the community or they may find themselves hampered by bothersome restrictions, Interstate General Manager R. J. O'Donnell declared in Dallas.

Stating that he had seen reports that there was more "censor conscious" activity in the United States and Canada, O'Donnell said:

"Theatres have been in the public eye during and since the war for the part they have played in worthy causes. We as showmen have proved what the theatre can do in the community. We've built up a good name nationally. Let's not lose it now by some carelessness which might give the impression that filth or smut is running wild again.

Field Day for 'Reformers'

"After any war there is bound to be confusion. And in this confusion there arises movements for reform. I don't criticize the honesty of these movements. I just want to point out that they have a way of moving in on the theatre with some sort of censorship consciousness if not positive censor action. As showmen we must be sure that we do not give any occasion for these movements to take action against us.

"The motion picture has done a wonderful job in policing itself. Yet I believe it could do even a better job if it considered regional traditions and viewpoints more closely. Some unintentional flouting of views which a whole area of the nation may hold seriously, can lead to very serious repercussions.

"Also I want to point out what can be a very real trouble-spot for us. I believe the coming months will see a spread of stage shows. It is possible for a single entertainer to plant the seed of future trouble because he uses some off-color remarks or songs to get an extra hand or so.

"Since our houses are primarily motion picture theatres, the mistakes of this type of actor subconsiously become associated in the public mind with the motion picture. We can control this of course if we watch what is going on in our theatres and take immediate action against any filth.

"Bad taste is seldom excusable; seldom profitable. In the long run it leads to an aroused public opinion which can be both troublesome and costly."

Films Increased Consumer Magazine Adv. in '45; Loew's $1,008,674 Tops

Eight motion picture companies spent $3,856,826 for magazine space during 1945 and by comparison apparently spent little on radio, figures published by Advertising Age revealed this week.

The listings, which were based on companies spending over $100,000 yearly in either radio or magazines, showed no motion picture company to have spent that amount with the 5 national networks but, showed by comparison with previous years that seven of the companies had been increasing their magazine budgets each year and that motion picture buying of magazine space now ranked well on a list comprising the nation's leading industrial users of such media.

Leading the list were Loew's, Inc. (which includes MGM) with a total of $1,008,674 for 1945, of which $1,008,324 was for MGM advertising and only $350 for Loew's. (Previous years' totals for this company were: 1944, $1,056,268; 1943, $725,597; 1942, $560,363); next was RKO with a 1945 expenditure of $805,062 ($97,562, 1942; $202,391, 1943, $266,364, 1944); Paramount $606,593 ($366,824, 1942; $457,311, 1943; $587,720, 1944); 20th Century-Fox $441,684 ($243,419, 1942; $279,399, 1943; $410,436, 1944); Warner Bros. $339,668 ($247,651, 1942; $278,537, 1943; $336,290, 1944); United Artists $310,807 ($124,208, 1942; $221,075 , 1943; $243,385, 1944); Universal $182,486 ($41,623, 1944, nothing in 1942, 1943); Republic $161,752 ($28,263, 1942; $112,768, 1943; $201,681, 1944.)

In comparison with other industries using magazine space MGM was 44th; (General Motors with 19 brands was 1st; Proctor and Gamble 2nd; Lever Bros. 3rd; General Electric 4th; Distillers' Corp. 5th, Schenley 6th; General Foods, with 31 brands, 7th; Swift and Company 9th; American Telephone and Telegraph 24th; Metropolitan Life 73rd; RKO 64th; Paramount 96th; 20th-Fox 142nd; Warners' 187th; UA 207th; Universal 311th; Republic 356th.

The fact that motion pictures appeared to be light radio advertisers is due to the fact that most radio advertising used by the industry is in connection with specific theatre dates rather than being blanket- coverage of the nation by a distributor company.

Distinguished Lists 5 For Initial Release

Distribution of three French postwar releases and two re-issues was announced this week by Distinguished Films, Inc., recently formed to distribute foreign films by William Brandt, president of Brandt Theatres, in association with Oliver A. Unger, vice-president, and Martin Levine, treasurer.

The films are: "Amok," based on the Stefan Zweig novel; "Her First Affair," with Danielle Darrieux; "The Devil's Hand" a psychological drama, and the two re-issues "Les Miserables" and "Cloistered." "Les Miserables" which runs three hours, will be split into two features titled, "Jean ValJean" and "Fantine," respectively. Negotiations for additional foreign films are under way. Noel Meadow is director of publicity.

Glass-Bound Book Tells Lamp Reflector History

A glass-bound book, giving the history of the Strong Electric Corporation's production of projection arc reflectors, is being distributed to theatre supply dealers of the nation.

The glass-covered book, said to be the first of its kind, is entitled "Strong Reflections," and the cover bears a reproduction of an arc lamp reflector with the back of the glass being silvered to give the reflector the appearance of a real mirror.

Claud Morris, former exploitation head for Samuel Goldwyn, joins the exploitation staff of Vanguard Films, April 1, and will handle the special exploitation on David O. Selznick's "Duel in the Sun."

Limited Facilities No Bar to Tiede's Special Selling of All-Western Bill

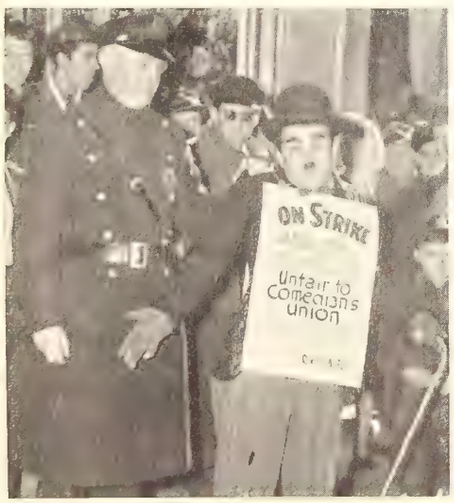
When it seems that all exploitation angles have been exhausted, the smart showman can always think of a new one or dress an old one in new clothes. Too, the smart showman exploits not only the outstanding attractions but also keeps his public fully apprised of the run-of-the-mill bookings through unique, appealing selling ideas.

Let's take the theatreman who plays two Westerns on one program, bills them in the ordinary manner, and then waits for the crowd to come in. Perhaps he feels the Westerns will sell themselves. Well, maybe so. But he may also feel that every angle of Western exploitation has been exhausted—so why bother?

Now, let's take a showman like R. G. Tiede, manager of the Community Theatre, Welland, Ontario, Canada. Having booked two Western films (Universal's "Frontier Badmen" and Columbia's "Lawless Empire"), Tiede was not content to just bill them in the ordinary manner. If some method of selling could be devised that would project greater appeal to more people, why not use it?

Faced with two obstacles—a limited budget and the absence of local radio stations—Tiede was not sidetracked from his determination. All was not lost—there were at least the local newspapers for ads and merchants for window displays. Right at the theatre was the screen, the front and the monthly program. The thing to do was to put these media to use. And that's just what Tiede did.

To create that extra appeal, the Welland showman decided to bill the two Westerns as "A Rodeo Special All Wild West Show." He ran teaser ads in the daily papers, projected a slide along with the regular trailers, used special advance displays in the lobby, promoted window displays of 11x14 cards in several prominent stores, planted a one-sheet poster right on Main Street. The theatre's monthly program was also brought into play.



TIEDE'S APPROACH. This top section of his opening-day ad shows the special approach used by Manager R. G. Tiede of the Community Theatre, Welland, Ontario, in selling a two-Western program, Universal's "Frontier Badmen" and Columbia's "Lawless Empire."

For the opening, Tiede dressed up the Community front with "all Western show" copy by means of special posters and a banner across the facade just above the box-office. And he ran a two-column, 11-inch ad on opening day which pointed up the special selling angle.

When all was said and done, box-office receipts were well worth the extra effort. Reports Tiede: "The manner and theme in which these two features were advertised to the public created much additional interest in the program."

Much more, it's safe to assume, than would have been the case had he chosen to just book 'em and play 'em.

STOPS TRAFFIC. A stooge dressed as Charlie Chaplin, wearing sandwich boards, picketed the RKO Albee Theatre, Providence, R. I., in advance of the showing of Universal's "Little Giant," and stopped traffic completely. At times it was necessary, as shown above, for the law to take the stooge in hand so that the crowds would disperse.

Powder Samples Publicize 'Because of Him'

Highlights of the campaign on Universal's "Because of Him" staged by Schine's City Manager Bob Cox of Lexington, Ky., was a tieup with the Revlon Cosmetic Company in connection with the film's showing at one of the circuit's theatres there.

Imprinted sample envelopes of the cosmetic firm's new powder were distributed to 2000 University of Kentucky co-eds and over cosmetic counters in all the large stores.

In addition, radio stations broadcast programs featuring Deanna Durbin records, and music, department and flower stores tied in with window displays.

Bob Cox Honored

Schine's Lexington, Ky., City Manager Bob Cox, of the lobby radio quiz fame, has been selected as the city's outstanding young man by the Junior Chamber of Commerce. A banquet was tendered in his honor and he was presented with a key symbolic of service to the community. Cox was accorded this honor in recogntion of his fine work in War Bond and other community campaigns.

DeHavilland to Head Paramount Star Treks

First of the projected Eastern treks to be undertaken by Paramount's top stars will be in connection with "To Each His Own," when Oliva deHavilland, star of the film, heads New Yorkwards, it was announced by Curtis Mitchell, national director of publicity and advertising, upon his return from the Coast.

In all probability, Miss deHavilland will tour some of the larger Eastern cities to meet the press in advance of the picture. Mitchell said there is a possibility of John Lund, male lead, accompanying her. Plans have been made for a steady stream of top-roster names to visit eastern centers, with deHavilland leading and the stars continuing on, in advance of their picture releases.

Another result of Mitchell's studio visit was closer co-ordination between the West Coast publicity department and the Home Office in the matter of publicity, advertising and exploitation pictures. In this connection, Rex Taylor, eastern coordinator of publicity, who went with Mitchell, will head all activities.

Greater publicity concentration on the studio's up-and-coming screen personalities was worked out between Mitchell and the company's producers.

20th-Fox in Nationwide Typewriter Tieup

A nationwide tieup has been concluded between 20th Century-Fox and the typewriter division of Remington Rand, Inc., whereby color and black-and-white advertisements tieing in with "The Shocking Miss Pilgrim" will run in national magazines and newspapers.

Tieup is based on a scene in the picture which shows Betty Grable using the first typewriter ever made, loaned for the purpose by the Remington Rand Company.

BLACK EYE. A well-dressed young woman carrying an overnight bag labeled with selling and playdate copy, toured the vicinity of the Rosetta Theatre, Miami, Fla., as a street ballyhoo for Columbia's "She Wouldn't Say Yes." Only thing marring the woman's appearance was a large black eye which made everyone look and point her out. Reason for the eye? Look at that title again. Responsible for the ballyhoo was Edward C. May, Rosetta manager.

Wide Campaign Hails 'Rebecca' Return Date

In organizing his campaign for the New York return engagement of "Rebecca," David O. Selznick's Academy Award winner, Manager Maurice Maurer of the Victoria Theatre started several days in advance by planting feature stories and art on the two stars in all metropolitan papers, with publicity based on two angles, the reason for the film's return and the special citation given by New York University's motion picture department to Selznick for the dramatic qualities of the film.

A variety of window displays was obtained, feature of which was the Lewis and Conger window headed "Tops in Value"—this store's windows are always crowd-stoppers. Among the other window displays were 12 florists, five wearing apparel shops, 53 pipe and cigar stores, pet shops, sporting goods stores and cafeterias, located in many important hotels and shops at busy intersections throughout the city. All displays featured stills or a star head, with full credit to the Victoria showing.

Radio outlets consisted of two quiz contests on "Rebecca," with winners receiving tickets to the opening, and many prominent plugs on programs with a Hollywood or motion picture theme, over local or network stations.

Co-op ads, arranged with a local furniture company, using the catchline, "Tops in Entertainment—Tops in Value," brought four 1000-line ads in newspapers in New York, Newark, Jersey City and Elizabeth, plugging "Rebecca," with prominent mention of the stars.

Libraries and book stores displayed the Daphne DuMaurier best-seller, from which the picture was adapted. The book, with the new "Rebecca" jacket, was prominently displayed on counters, book shelves, and store windows, along with stills and cards advertising the Victoria return engagement.

37 Century Theatres in Kiddie Show Venture

In response to organized requests from parents and Parent-Teacher Associations, Century Theatres' 37 houses in Brooklyn and Long Island are now presenting morning Kiddie Shows once a month, consisting of cartoons, Westerns, etc.

School authorities in the various neighborhood have endorsed the plan and are giving active cooperation toward its success.

TERRIFIC STREET BALLYHOO. C. A. Stewart of the Orpheum Theatre, Topeka, Kans., set the town all agog when he arranged to have a model train ride through the community on opening day of MGM's "The Harvey Girls." As can be seen from the photo above, the stunt provided a terrific street ballyhoo. All you need is a model train—and here's hoping you find one.

Teschner, Deardorff Hit High Mark in 'Harvey' Campaign

That the theatres playing MGM's "The Harvey Girls" are expending every trick in the book to get the most out of the film has been reported from time to time, and a campaign that takes a fairly prominent place among the better efforts is that planned and carried out by Manager Ted Teschner of Loew's Valentine, Toledo, and Charley Deardorff, MGM exploiteer.

Street ballyhoo, outdoor posting, bus and street car cards, bannered news trucks, juke boxes, window displays galore and radio were used in various ways to let the population know about the film and where and when it was to play.

Away-from the-theatre stunts included having three young ladies carry cards, each naming part of the title and playdate. The three ballyhooers carried their cards in mixed up fashion and upon reaching a busy street corner arranged themselves in proper order. Three other young ladies toured the streets in an old fashioned horse-drawn surrey, wearing "Harvey Girls" costumes. A large sign on the back of the surrey apprised onlookers of what the stunt was about.

Three thousand teaser cards were placed around the city with copy, "Call the Harvey Girls—Telephone Emerson 2001," which, of course, was the number of the Valentine Theatre. Two hundred directional arrows with copy, "Straight Ahead for 'The Harvey Girl'," were placed at main intersections and 4000 table standees were placed on tables at downtown restaurants, reading "Reserved for 'The Harvey Girls'." Downtown cafes and restaurants also used 10,000 imprinted napkins.

Copy of the book jacket was blown up large enough to form a "walking book," with a young man taking the ballyhoo throughout the streets of the city. An arrangement also was made whereby cards were placed inside juke box display glass urging readers to "Hear Judy Garland sing on the Atchinson, Topeka and Santa Fe," and "See Judy Garland in 'The Harvey Girls' at Loew's Valentine Theatre, etc."

All Buckeye News trucks covering Toledo and vicinity were bannered in a tieup with Movie Magazine and the film. Window and counter displays were set in book stores and in the book sections of all department stores. Tieups also were made for window displays at music stores and with five-and-ten-cent stores.

Radio was used extensively in addition to the valuable MGM-sponsored spot announcements. WSPD has a program called The Midnight Express, playing recorded tunes. The disc jockey here used "Harvey" tunes for a full week in advance of the film's showing, and donated announcements about the film each time one of the tunes went out over the air. Another WSPD feature has a locally popular m.c. handling a recorded program each Saturday from 3 to 5 p.m. For two weeks prior to opening this young man gave at least eight announcements a program to the tunes from the film.

The regular newspaper advertising space was augmented by using the national campaign arranged by MGM.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA, ETC. George Peters, manager of Loew's Richmond Theatre, thinks that house organist Eddie Weaver in character, doing his organlogue on "The Harvey Girls" the week before the picture opened, was a novel and effective ballyhoo, and so do we.

Outlaws Lasso GIs in Richmond 'Outlaw' Stunt

Outstanding stunt of the comprehensive exploitation campaign essayed by Manager George Peters of Loew's, Richmond, and United Artists Exploiteer Dave Polland, for Howard Hughes' "The Outlaw," had twelve beautiful Richmond debutante "Outlaws" on horseback lasso their own dates at McGuire General Hospital. Conducted with the cooperation of the Army Welfare officer and the Red Cross, the stunt was covered by Richmond newspapers and attracted considerable attention. The girls took their dates to dinner and entertained them at a special showing of the film.

Because of the controversy engendered by "The Outlaw," it received considerably more than average space in Richmond newspapers, including an editorial in the Times Dispatch, written in a light vein and kidding the Memphis censor for banning the film. The newspaper's drama editor followed with a two-column story with art about the picture, referring to its controversial nature. Other advance stories and art were generous.

Radio was used widely, with four stations carrying station break announcements that averaged one every hour on each station for a week prior to opening day. Edith Lindeman, drama critic of the Times-Dispatch, devoted an entire 15-minute program to the picture the Sunday before opening. A furniture store's daily 15-minute program asked questions about the picture, with photos of Jane Russell going to the listeners who sent in correct answers. Harvey Hudson, conductor of a Man in the Street program, staged two of his sessions in front of the theatre before opening day, with all questions on the programs devoted to "The Outlaw."

Silk-screened window cards, locally made 24-sheet posters and other standard publicity outlets were used to round out the campaign.

Bridal Ballyhoo

An attractive young lady garbed in bridal costume strolling down the main shopping street and distributing gag heralds was part of the advance ballyhoo staged by Manager Francis Aiello for the showing of "The Sailor Takes a Wife" at the Grand Theatre, Latrobe, Pa.

Kids Review Film

Manager Gus Marakas, Orpheum Theatre, Connellsville, Pa., plugged the showing of "They Were Expendable" at his theatre by distributing heralds to school children announcing a contest in which prizes and guest tickets would be awarded for the best 50-word reviews on the film.

OUTLAWS. Four of the twelve Richmond beauties who traveled to McGuire General Hospital to lasso their own dinner dates in connection with the showing of Howard Hughes' "The Outlaw" at Loew's Richmond Theatre. Stunt was well covered by press and was staged by Manager George Peters and U. A. Exploiteer Dave Polland.

3-Day Contest Tops Campaign on 'Whistle'

Hartford's Loew's Poli Manager Lou Cohen and his assistant, Sam Horwitz, really went out and sold "Whistle Stop" to the populace of the town and the surrounding region. Top stunt was a three-day newspaper contest in the Hartford Times in which readers were to name the feminine co-stars in previous George Raft films, pictured on the movie page each day. The first 25 correct answers of the more than 300 entries were awarded guest tickets, while "Whistle Stop" received plenty of publicity.

A local reviewer devoted her 15-minute broadcast to the film the day before opening, discussing book, picture and stars. Local book departments featured counter displays of stills and theatre credit cards, also a counter card with the following copy: "Prize winning books make great pictures. Read the book and see the picture." Local news company trucks were bannered. At its morning and afternoon record programs radio station WTHT ran a "Whistle Stop Essay Contest," giving cash prizes and guest tickets to the best composition describing different types of whistling.

Strand Revises Preview

Previewing of the incoming film the night before the regular opening has been revived by the New York Strand. The once regular custom of showing the new attraction on the final night of the preceding picture was discontinued during the war.

Easter Is Showmanship Time

With the coming of Easter, showmen have an excellent opportunity to promote their theatres and their attractions. The new spring fashions, Easter vacations, Easter egg hunts, etc., all provide fine methods to spread the goodwill of the theatre throughout the community.

Fashion shows can be arranged in cooperation with a local department store, the store's advertising head and fashion buyers. The fashion editor of the local newspaper will be willing to aid. Models, announcers and entertainers can be recruited from local schools, sororities or fraternities.

Easter time means school vacations for the kids, and you should do your best to encourage them to attend your showings, being sure to exhibit films that will appeal to them. Cartoon shows are always a popular item. An Easter Monday morning special Kiddie Show using the local juvenile talent should be well received.

Easter egg hunts, in cooperation with local playground, park, and play center directors, will avail you more opportunities for extensive publicity and ballyhooing your theatre. Request your local paper to print a map giving clues as to the whereabouts of the eggs, and offer prizes for each egg brought in.

Cigar Tieup Highlights Albany 'Trunk' Selling

A 10-day advance campaign through newspapers, radio, and other exploitation media heralded the opening of "Saratoga Trunk" at Warners' Strand Theatre, Albany, N. Y. Product of Leo Rose, Strand manager, and Charles Smakwitz, Warner zone advertising and publicity director, the campaign aided in breaking all opening-day records.

Officials of Saratoga, Albany, and the Cigar Institute of America, were among the 100 guests attending the premiere dinner at the De Witt Clinton Hotel. Two busses, with motorcycle police escort, transported the guests from the hotel to the theatre for the premiere showing.

Newspaper tie-ins involved the running of daily pictures and stories, the presentation of a box of cigars from Gary Cooper to the father of every baby boy born on premiere day, and the sponsoring of the personal appearance of Monty Woolley on opening day. One paper held a special run of the Saratoga Trunk special from Albany to Saratoga, carrying the Times Union's critic, publisher and photographer, with the Mayor, city officials and a band meeting them at Saratoga.

Spot announcements a full week in advance and a direct broadcast and rebroadcast the day following the dinner and premiere were carried by all local stations.

Hearns Lands Fine Window on 'Yes'

Working in a small city where tieups are harder to promote requires a greater degree of concentration on the part of the theatreman.

Which is by way of awarding the palm to Johnny Hearns of the Palace Theatre, Trenton, N. J., for promotion of a fine window in the local Adam Hat store tieing-in that brand of headgear with Columbia's "She Wouldn't Say Yes."

Catchline for the tieup, following the title, was "But She Did When I Got An Adam Hat." Theatre credit and playdates were prominently placed.

Just in case you think the Palace manager is a "one-window" Johnny, it should be pointed out that the Adam Hat display was just one of many.

'Bel Ami' Teaser Ads Set for Magazines

Magazine teaser ads, running three months ahead of release date, have been developed for the forthcoming production of Loew-Lewin's "Bel Ami, or the History of a Scoundrel," starring George Sanders and based on the De-Maupassant tale.

The ads are only three inches deep and feature the slug, "Bel Ami Says. . .," over an outlined head of Sanders. The selling angle is concentrated in a series of quotes about women, all taken from Albert Lewin's script. Ads were designed by Loew-Lewin, in association with United Artists' Paul Lazarus, Jr., and the Lawrence Fertig agency of New York.

'Kidd' Treasure Hunt

Getting eight local merchants to place an ad in his half-page newspaper co-op, and, also, to put a treasure in one of their windows, Strand Theatre Manager Clark Jordan, Amsterdam, N. Y., used the Treasure Hunt theme to promote the showing of "Captain Kidd" at his theatre. Readers were to make a list of the treasures in the window. First ten correct entries received guest tickets.

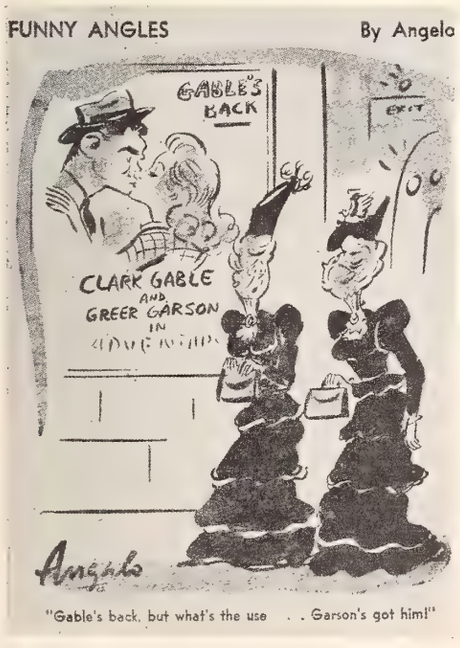
Airplane Publicity for U's 'So Goes My Love'

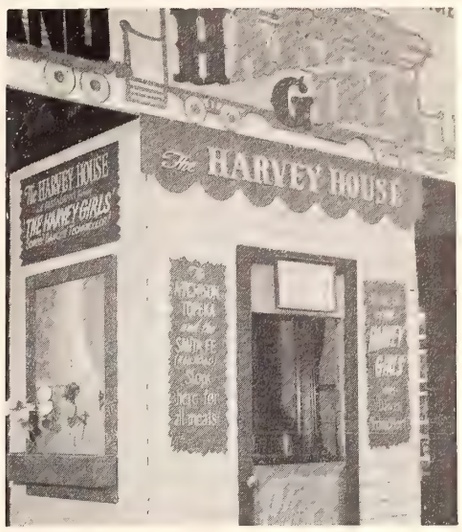
Highlight of the comprehensive exploitation campaign planned by Universal for the Jack H. Skirball-Bruce Manning production, "So Goes My Love" is the revolutionary introduction of a publicity airplane which will carry a new firm of publicists throughout the country extolling the virtues of the new film. The plane has been made available by Aeronca Aircraft Corporation for the use of the new firm, Airways Publicity, composed of former war pilots.



This week Charles Simonelli, Universal's director of special events, and Charles Lockwood, airways publicity organizer, left on the first leg of their 14-city trip to California. Myrna Loy will christen the plane in Los Angeles on April 3. First stop is Middletown, Ohio.

Lockwood's ship will be completely equipped as a flying publicity office with stills, stories, mats and other appurtenances to be used in the campaign, and also will carry a print of "So Goes My Love" to be shown to critics and exhibitors at each stop on the itinerary.

Opening of the promotional program took place Thursday (21) at the Pierre Hotel where Lenesta, famous hat designer, sponsored a fashion show at which new millinery, inspired by the hats worn by Myrna Loy in the film, were introduced to more than 400 fashion experts, reporters and radio commentators. The hats will be merchandised in more than 300 stores in key cities.



Tieins with national advertisers have been arranged as has a re-issue of the book with a new jacket crediting the film.

A special program of the Double Or Nothing Radio show will be dedicated to "So Goes My Love" April 28th via 236 Mutual stations from the stage of the Erlanger Theatre, Buffalo, at the picture's premiere.

"Gable's back, but what's the use . . . Garson's got him!"

GIVEAWAY. A cartoonist for the Philadelphia Inquirer did this cartoon, based on the well known phrase, "Gables Back and Garson's Got Him!" and Manager Sam Gilman, Loew's Regent, Harrisburg, got permission to reprint it as an advance giveaway to plug MGM's "Adventure." Adds a novel touch, doesn't it?

NOVEL BOX-OFFICE. This miniature replica of a Harvey House was built around the box office of Loew's Regent Theatre, Harrisburg, as part of the extensive exploitation campaign for MGM's "The Harvey Girls" essayed by Manager Sam Gilman. The change in the Regent's front was effective, eye-filling and sold tickets.—HA.

Urge Local Adaptations Of MGM Baby Contest

The universal and forgiveably fatuous belief of fond parents that their offsprings' beauty transcends that of all others has resulted in the exceptional success of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's national contest for "Future Ziegfeld Beauties." Three million heralds announcing the contest and listing prizes and requirements were distributed in 15 cities with more than 5000 entries received in MGM's home office. Just $350 in prizes were offered.

The contest herald was called the "Ziegfeld Follies" edition of MGM's Screen Forecast and in addition to plugging the "Follies" gave considerable space to "The Harvey Girls" and listed several of MGM's coming attractions. There was space available for local theatre imprint on the last page.

Contestants were required to send a snapshot or photo of their girl children to MGM's home office with winners to be decided on the basis of "who, in the opinion of the editors (of Screen Forecast), have the makings of future Ziegfeld Follies Girls." Personality, as well as beauty, was to be considered.

Details of the contest are listed here with the suggestion to showmen who will play the Technicolor extravaganza, to set up similar contests with local newspapers, radio stations and department stores. The contest is a natural and most newspaper editors will go for it. Radio station promotion managers might use it to prove to prospective advertisers the pulling power of their stations and department store baby clothing and accessory departments can tie in to promote the sale of their own wares.

First prize winner, 2½-year-old Barbara Ellen Eisenstein, of New York City will be formally presented with a check for $100 on the stage of the Capitol Theatre during the engagement of "Ziegfeld Follies of 1946."

Other winners are: Dana Jo Chapman, Parsons, Kans.; Mary Martha Calvert, Mansfield, La.; Nancy Sue Levine, Brooklyn; Carol Sue Kimbrell, Winchester, Ky.; Sandra Lou Blackburn, Temple, Texas; Carleen Ann Carlson, Duluth, Minn.; Betty Ann Kolthoff, Cleveland, Ohio; Evelyn Goldblatt, West Hempstead, N. Y.; Jean Marie Roberson, Norfolk, Va.; Marion Kay Mann, Ocala, Fla.; Sandra Lee Kantz, Ralston, Wash.; Sherry Lyn Urban, San Diego, Cal.; Bonnie Jean Hawes, Milton, Mass.; Mary Alice Gilley, Marlin, Tex.

Press Book Ideas Proved Workable for 'Bandit'

Ideas for exploitation included in the press book of Columbia's "Bandit of Sherwood Forest," seem to have the "workability" requisite according to reports of exploitation accomplishment coming in to Columbia's home office.

In a small section of one page of the press book, for instance, there is a detailed explanation of how one store capitalized on the idea to set up a display of archery equipment. Seems as though every showmen playing the film has hopped on that one with Joe Alexander and Nathan Wise, manager and publicity manager, respectively of the RKO Albee, Cincinnati, getting full windows on the tieup in four sporting goods stores and two department stores.

Harry Boesel, manager of the Palace, Milwaukee, set up an archery tieup involving a champion archer, archery lessons, an archery contest and got three department store windows, to boot.

Listened Well

Sears Roebuck listened well to George McKennon, manager, and Bill Brereton, publicity manager of the Lafayette in Buffalo, and displayed archery equipment in its windows, as well as taking newspaper advertising extolling the value of its equipment and the "Bandit." Three sporting goods stores also thought enough of the idea to go for window space.

In San Antonio, Manager Henry Bergman and Publicity Manager Jack Chalman of the Aztec, arranged for a department store tieup, including windows and inside displays and also convinced a sporting goods store of the tieup's value. Other displays of similar nature were arranged in Indianapolis, Dallas, New Haven, Harrisburg, Minneapolis and St. Paul . . . with reports of others still coming in.

Other examples of the campaign's "workability" include book and library displays; the application of the word "color" to inspire window displays as, for example, gowns in Sherwood Forest Green, or Robin Hood Brown, etc.

Then there is a tieup on hats, which has been worked successfully in Dallas, Cincinnati, Hartford and other towns. Other workable gags include the tieups already arranged with national sponsors and which can be localized easily. They include: Blackfriar Kindreds, Max Factor Cosmetics, Coro Jewelry, Parents magazine and Lux Soap.

The school tieup idea based on the recorded music of the Columbia Masterworks Album, have been reported heretofore, and it is gaining momentum with school cooperation in nearly every city where the picture has played.

INDICATIVE. This false front treatment given to the World Theatre, New York, for the world premiere of the Italian importation, "Open City" is indicative of the importance attached to the film by Arthur Mayer and Joseph Burstyn, its distributors.

THE BOX OFFICE SLANT

Thunder Town

PRC Western 55 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Just an average western with enough action to take its place in the category of fair entertainment for western fans.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Should do as well as previous Bob Steele films.

Cast: Bob Steele, Syd Saylor, Ellan Hall, Bud Geary, Charles King, Edward Howard, Steve Clark, Bud Osborne, Jimmy Aubrey. Credits: Produced by Arthur Alexander. Directed by Harry Fraser. Original screenplay by James Oliver. Photography, Robert Cline.

Plot: Bob Steele returns to town on parole from the state penitentiary where he has spent a year under a framed charge. His parole prevents his carrying a gun or from getting into any kind of trouble. Determined to prove his innocence, he uses the then new science of ballistics to convict the really guilty parties.

Comment: The heroics in this new Bob Steele Western are so artificial as to be laughable, except, of course, to those dyed-in-the-wool Western addicts who forgive implausibilities if there is plenty of action and gunplay. And there is plenty of action here, for Steele and his opponents slug each other viciously, although there are no visible signs on their persons of the results of their fistic encounters. The story is fairly interesting, but the acting is below par. Direction is haphazard and the budget reins seem to have been held pretty tightly. Just an average Bob Steele Western that will get by with Western fans.

So Goes My Love

Universal Drama 88 min.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Should please average audiences, especially family spectators and the feminine contingent who will find nostalgia in the hardships of the young couple, and will like the naturalness and down-to-earth quality that pervades the film.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Can stand alone or as the top feature on a dual bill. The names Myrna Loy and Don Ameche should help attract patronage.

Cast: Myrna Loy, Don Ameche, Rhys Williams, Bobby Driscoll, Richard Gaines, Molly Lamont, Sarah Padden, Renie Riano, Clara Blandick, John Gallaudet, John Phillips, Bruce Edwards, Howard Freeman, Wheaton Chambers, Pierre Watkin. Credits: Directed by Frank Ryan. Screenplay by Bruce Manning and James Clifden. Based upon "A Genius in the Family" by Hiram Percy Maxim. Photography, Joseph Valentine. Produced by Jack H. Skirball. A Skirball-Manning Production.

Plot: On her way from a New England farm to Brooklyn to find herself a wealthy, substantial husband, a young girl meets a lovable, carefee inventor. Just as her wedding to a "solid and stolid citizen" is being announced she decides to wed the inventor. The problems she faces in teaching her husband the niceties of social obligation and respectability are eventually solved.

Comment: Fraught with a goodly share of the humor and pathos of everyday life, "So Goes My Love" is a picture that should please average audiences, especially the feminine contingent. There is human interest in the story of the struggles of a young wife to help her husband become famous, wealthy and a respected member of the community—a story near to the heart of most women, and they'll tell their friends about it. The continuity lacks smoothness, omitting certain details that would help clarify some of the circumstances. Then, too, Myrna Loy as the wife and Don Ameche as the husband show no signs of aging, despite the passing of years. These detects, however, are comparatively minor and a matter of criticism, with most moviegoers not bothering to consider them. Miss Loy and Mr. Ameche handle their roles capably, and their names should help to attract patronage for the film, which will stand alone or as the top feature on a dual bill.

PRC Western 57 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Will fulfill the Western fans' demand for hard riding and gunplay.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Standard Western offering; good in houses that specialize in this type of fare.

Cast: Bob Steele, Syd Saylor, Edward Cassidy, Caren Marsh, Stanley Blystone, Edward Howard, Charles King, Jr., Bud Osborne, Budd Buster, Henry Hall. Credits: Produced by Arthur Alexander. Directed by Harry Fraser. Original screenplay, Harry Fraser. Photography, Jack Greenhalgh.

Plot: A young white boy leaves the Navajo Indian settlement where he was raised by foster-parents, to search for his real father. His only clues are his mother's wedding ring and a locket she was wearing when killed by Apaches. He gets on the right trail, but in the meantime there's a fight and he is sent to jail. When he breaks jail and attempts to shoot it out with the Sheriff, he learns that the Sheriff is his father, and there's a happy reunion.

Comment: This Bob Steele Western will be well received by the juvenile audiences, for it is primed with hard riding, hard fighting and plenty of it, and the plot is as believable as this type of fare permits. It is a satisfactory western for both the houses that specialize in this type of offering and the neighborhoods where the kids like to see their heroes riding and shooting and giving out excitement. Steele, as the Navajo Kid, and Syd Saylor, his comic partner, are in their usual good form. Caren Marsh looks pretty and acts as Western heroines are supposed to act. Edward Cassidy as the honest Sheriff and Stanley Blystone, a villainy villain, give acceptable performances. Direction by Harry Fraser maintains a rapid and well-timed pace throughout.

JOIN THE FIGHT ON CANCER

Suspense

Monogram Drama 101 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Adult) An unusually good picture combining sensational ice skating with a tense mystery that carries plenty of suspense and excitement.

BOX-OFFICE: Top production that should be set for extra playing time in the houses that usually play Monogram product, and strong enough to warrant playing time in the houses that have never before played Monogram product.

Cast: Belita, Barry Sullivan, Bonita Granville, Albert Dekker, Eugene Pallette, George E. Stone, Edit Angold, Leon Belasco, Miguelito Valdes, Bobby Ramos and his Band. Credits: Directed by Frank Tuttle. Original screenplay by Philip Yordan. Skating sequences by Nick Castle. Photography, Karl Struss. Produced by Maurice and Frank King.

Plot: A vagabond with an unknown background gets a job with an ice palace through the good graces of the owner, who is married to the star. He starts out selling peanuts, but being an unscrupulous climber, makes a play for the star and gradually gets to the top. The husband, when he becomes aware of the situation, arranges his fake death via a snow slide, but turns up to haunt the climber. Eventually both the husband and the man are killed and the star goes on to bigger and better things.

Comment: Easily the best product Monogram has ever turned out, "Suspense" can be favorably compared with anything, of this type, that has been released by any of the major studios. It has enough pull—once the advance exploitation attracts attention and brings them in, and word-of-mouth gets around—to fill the top spot in any location, including those houses that have never before played Monogram product. Excellent in each of the usual production phases, from background sets, acting, direction and photography, it has the additional draw of Belita's sensational ice skating ballets which add terrifically to the entertainment of its tense, dramatic story. Added to the above mentioned amusement ingredients is the specialty number by Miguelito Valdes and the music of Bobby Ramos and his Band. Although due credit must be given the King Brothers who produced and were responsible for this outstanding film, and to the players and writer of the script, it is Frank Tuttle's exceptional direction and Nick Castle's staging of the ice ballets that makes this the high quality attraction it is. Barry Sullivan should find himself in great demand after the excellence of this performance. He proves himself an able and worthy contender for any type of role. Albert Dekker, Eugene Pallette and Bonita Granville are fine in their roles and Belita proves she does not have to take second place in the dramatic department, in spite of her introduction as a skating star. The exhibitors who run Monogram product will be cheating themselves out of extra cash at the box-office, if they do not arrange for extended playing time. The picture warrants it.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

Petting Harmful to Theatre's Reputation

In uppermost recesses of balconies, where it is dark and seldom fully occupied unless the theatre is doing a brisk business, lovers find an ideal spot. They make this part of the theatre their trysting place after experience has proved they are not liable to be molested.

There is a time and place for love-making—but not in the theatre during a performance. No one objects to sweethearts or husbands and wives holding hands; such action bothers no one. But any further demonstrations of love distract and offend patrons who pay the admission price for the right to see and enjoy the show.

Granted that balcony love-making is far removed from the well-populated orchestra section and thus does not encroach on the majority of patrons' enjoyment of the performance, the fact nevertheless remains that the theatre can acquire a bad reputation from respected and law-abiding citizens.

In the first place, there is something sordid and forbidding about a place known to be a rendezvous for petters. Then too—and this is very important—parents will make every effort (if the situation reaches their ears) to prevent their daughters from attending a theatre where the possibility exists that they will be permitted to indulge in "necking."

It is also quite logical to presume that wayward husbands and/or wives might meet at the theatre at periodic intervals to pursue their love-making in the darkened balcony. Though an effort might be made to keep such meetings secret (such as one entering the theatre several minutes before the other), the practice is bound to be noticed by someone, becoming harmful gossip within a short time.

Balcony petting in many cases may be comparatively harmless, but this does not alter the fact that the practice can damage the theatre's reputation. The alert manager will see to it that the balcony and other sections of the house where petting might gain a foothold is well "policed" by a competent staff. The few patrons jarred from their amorous interludes are of little consequence compared to the damage to the theatre's reputation and the loss of disgruntled patrons.

Correctly Located Sand Urns Save Repair Costs

Holes in the carpet and floors of rest rooms and lounges littered with cigaret butts, indicate that the theatre has not provided a sufficient number of receptacles.

Sand urns should be located in the lobby, foyer, lounges and rest rooms. The amount spent on these items usually is well invested, saving repair charges on carpeting, cleaning stains from floors and possibly remodeling after a fire.

Tell the Manager

Sometimes the basis of a successful damage suit against a theatre has been built up because a seemingly trivial accident was not reported immediately to the theatre manager by the nearest house employe when the accident occurred. The entire staff should be told and told definitely, that each accident, no matter how small, MUST be reported to the manager within seconds after it happens.

The Brass Tacks of Efficient Picture Theatre Management

BUILD PROGRAMS FOR SHOW APPEAL

By Jack Jackson

The supreme test of a showman's "class" is his ability to put a program together that entertains people the way they like to be entertained. Here, therefore, is a discussion (by a man with the know-how) on ways and means of discovering the all important "audience pattern" and with that determined, the vital basic principles of selection of screen material for preparing a "dish" of entertainment that will send the customers away happy and determined to come back to your theatre for more of same.

Do you build your shows or just throw them together?

That may sound like a silly question to some followers of these articles but familiarity with buying and booking both from the distribution and exhibition viewpoint, coupled with a penchant for program perfection and constant observation of faulty show construction forces the conclusion that all too little time is being spent by the average manager in selecting screen material for proper balance and correct alignment in presentation schedule.

The wide variety of short subjects now available together with the broad range of story material and vividly imaginative scripting so prevalent in the feature mart, offers little excuse for any manager—except those caught in a product pocket—offering the public anything other than a perfectly balanced screen show.

Creating proper program balance is one of the most important—and probably one of the most neglected—elements in the formula of successful theatre operation. Complete knowledge of the technical properties and story content as well as stars and characters of available films is essential. This, coupled with a thorough understanding of the likes and dislikes of your customers and a modicum of common sense will enable any theatre manager to present an entertainment bill of fare that will rival the culinary accomplishments of the famous Oscar of the Waldorf. And, if the service and comfort facilities of your theatre are correct, those who partake of your entertainment fare can be depended upon to depart with that feeling of contented well-being which guarantees not only their return for future programs but a spreading of "praise propaganda" that sends new feet trekking to sweeten the take at your box-office.

Recreation as Necessary as Food and Sleep

Let's give a quick "look-see" at our business as it effects the lives of those who pay for the privilege of occupying our seats. Both science and medicine have decreed that recreation is as important to the well-being of the human race as is food and sleep. That makes our job kinda important and imposes a service analogous to that performed by the great chef. The fellow who lays the admission price on the cashier's slab is "show hungry" just as the chap at the restaurant counter or table is "food hungry." And, just as the chap in the restaurant wants salad, vegetables, meat, drink and desert to satisfy his food appetite, so does the theatre patron crave and expect variety in the entertainment fare served to satisfy his show appetite. We as theatre operators, just like the restaurant proprietors, succeed in building a steady clientele and prospering, in exact relation to our ability to satisfy—with quality, service and variety—the appetites of those who patronize our esablishments.

To bring this neglected matter of getting variety into our shows a little more forcibly to your attention, let me cite a couple of glaring instances.

I recently looked over an exhibition schedule calling for Abbott and Costello, Leon Errol and Bugs Bunny on one program and a few days later March of Time's "Occupied Germany," was coupled with a travelogue, newsreel and "China's Little Devils." I've seen schedules calling for color shorts to go with color features and so many other instances of product dissipation and monotonous subject presentation that I get to wondering sometimes if the person responsible is not being guided by a Gypsy dream book and a Ouija board.

Perfectly Balanced Programs Key to Profits, Says Jackson

Of course I know that the item of cost must be considered and that the bulk buy of excess shorts sometimes puts a fellow in somewhat of a spot. But, it would be far better to pay for and shelve a reel than to spot it in a program where its content damages rather than emphasizes the enjoyment of the surrounding fare. I know of nothing that will pay better dividends at the box-office than a careful analysis of the available short subjects and their placement as balancing ingredients to feature film fare.

The short subject was created for the express purpose of providing variety for, and emphasizing the amusement quotient of, the feature film. Laying down any set rule for the building of motion picture programs is impossible as so much depends on the desires of respective theatre patronages.

Customer Pattern Exists

Study of the average theatre will invariably prove that a customer pattern exists and that the pattern moves in a regular recurring cycle. Once this cycle of attendance is determined, the proper assimilation of available shorts is easy. If the pattern shows that mystery films enjoy good attendance when played on certain days that's the place for the Disney's or musicals. If on other days the heavy drama is popular put it in a setting of Edgar Kennedy, Leon Errol or the 3 Stooges. When color features are available don't dissipate a color short. Save those glamor bits for the long black and white features where their eye-appeal will be both diverting and satisfying. Get your Fashion Views, Passing Parades and Travelogues on the screen when the ladies are present and don't try to dish them up to Roy Roger's fans. Balance the Abbott and Costellos and Bob Hopes with the Personoddities and drama content shorts like Superman and don't waste the monkey shines of Donald Duck on people whose sides are already sore from laughing. If the emotional content of your feature is heavy or sordid give it a setting of laugh subjects or fast band musicals, but where you have a musical romance feature box it with the matter-of-fact shorts and a cartoon.

By all means watch your running time and don't surfeit the patrons with too much show. If the feature is long send it off with a snappy cartoon and when you have a short feature spread yourself on the surrounding show and TELL THEM ABOUT IT. I recently issued orders to have one-frame trailers made on all of the leading short subject characters for comedy players have a following rivaling the most prominent Hollywood stars.

While on the subject of running time I'd like to suggest that—while it is not always possible—attention be paid to arranging the show-breaks to conform to peak patronage expectancy. Very often the addition of a short reel or the re-arranging of the exhibition schedule will allow for extension or contraction of schedule that will give you the maximum spill just when the biggest crowd is pressing for admittance. And, there's the ever-present problem of overtime to watch. In this connection avoid being "penny wise and pound foolish." Look over your previous box-office reports to determine possible patronage for near-closing hours before setting the feature start earlier than usual in order to avoid that extra hour for the operator. You may find—as I did once—that you are sacrificing tens to save ones.

That subject of cost probably deserves more consideration than the few lines written above. All of us are cursed with an uncontrollable overhead that is staggering and the problem of planning for the highest possible revenue expectancy at the lowest possible cost deserves priority rating. Your preferred time is, of course, sought after to the point of demand by every distributor and the fact that they are all making some mighty swell pictures right now makes the solution somewhat different. However, some time spent analyzing how the film was received in other situations comparable to your own will enable you to put up a swell argument in case the outlook is unfavorable in your case. A good argument, based on sound and fair reasoning, has gotten favorable action from no end of branch managers who will, if convinced of your fairness, re-allocate or revert—and sometimes substitute—pictures to lower brackets and to non-preferrable playing time. But don't try to "put one over" or to abuse whatever confidence the distributor may have in your honesty. If you do you can look for an atom bomb in your bank book when "that other time" that is always just around the corner happens along.

It will require a lot of study—and advance study, too—to get your exhibition releasing program in line with your business expectancy, house policy and picture commitments but it's time well spent and pays off handsomely. And don't overlook those little fellers. They are the spice that seasons the entertainment dish and determines whether the folks who left in the last "spill" are busy selling your show to other people down the street or at their homes.

Watch the cost; watch the running time; watch the variety; watch the alignment and watch the time schedule. Then, watch the steady upsweep on your profit chart.

Management Observation

One of the things that seldom happen in any well regulated theatre was observed just recently in a first run Broadway house in New York City when one of the house staff, noticing that something was wrong on one of the rear exit doors, sent for the house carpenter and then indulged in an audible conversation with him about how the door should be repaired.

The picture, of course, happened to be showing one of its dramatic moments when the voices first were heard. Patrons sitting near this observer began turning around to see what caused the noise which was interfering with their enjoyment of the film. This lasted about two minutes (it seemed nearer 10) when one irascible gent stood up, turned to the rear and shouted "For ——sake will you please cut out that racket!" and then mumbled for another few seconds.

The theatre attache seemed not only startled but cowed, as well he should have been. But this is just another example of ill-trained employes and reflects careless management that should not be tolerated in any theatre, much less a Broadway showcase.

Safe Ladders a MUST To Eliminate Accidents

Insurance company statistics indicate that an accident occurring often among theatre employes is occasioned by wobbly ladders, causing not only painful injury but inviting damage suits and the inevitably resulting increase in cost of compensation insurance.

While the ladder most widely used should be sturdy and well built, two should be provided with a substantial platform suspended between them to carry needed marquee letters and to permit the employe using the ladder such safety as can be provided by the use of a rail at about waist height.

Running Record of Print Inspections Advocated

Often the print damage charges levied against a theatre are the basis of much argument between manager, projectionist and the exchange to fix responsibility for the alleged damage.

By keeping an accurate record on the hour of receipt of a print, the condition on inspection, number of times the print is projected, splices, etc., this responsibility can be fixed and in addition it may reveal, by the type of film damage recorded, whether or not the projection machine itself has a defect not apparent except through the cause of damage.

Don't Touch

That most persons have an aversion to personal contact with strangers is just one of the reasons why the theatre staff, particularly the ushers, should be trained not to touch a patron under the delusion that this is required in directing them to seats.

THEATRE MANAGEMENT

Detailed Theatre Inspection Advocated

Complete Survey Will Reveal Conditions and Avoid Possible Losses

The theatre manager who is absolutely sure that reasonable precautions have been taken to protect his theatre from the possibility of accident, fire and from deterioration due to neglect is a rare individual, indeed, particularly if he is honest with himself.

Readers of these columns have come across exhortations begging managers to do jobs which they should do in the normal course of events. And some may think, negatively, that what suits their superiors suits them. But they are wrong—thoroughly wrong! The information contained herein is designed not only to prod theatre men into action for their own protection but to enable them to actually manage their theatres to such a degree of near perfection that their abilities along these lines may be recognized by superiors to the extent that they will progress in their chosen fields, and incidentally to protect managers from the possible accidents and personal suits for damages that may result from neglect.

The best way to maintain a theatre is, primarily, to know it. And the best way to obtain a thorough acquaintance is to get on a pair of overalls, at least once, and go over every inch of the theatre in company with electricians, maintenance men or whoever is charged with responsibility to the manager for such maintenance.

Start at the Top

In making a maintenance tour of the theatre the following are some of the things that require checking from time to time, how often depending in the manager's judgment, on use, dependability, etc.

The glass in all skylights should be checked periodically. The automatic or other louvres, fan houses or ducts and every part of equipment that comes through the hanging ceiling also should be inspected often. Close inspection of the metal lathes and plastering might reveal a weak spot that could come crashing down during the height of a rush crowd. Plaster that looks suspicious from the floor should get an immediate inspection to make sure that it is tight and strong.

Following the hanging ceiling inspection, a check should be made in company with the electrician of the theatre or from an outside source, on all outlets, connection boxes to see that they are clean, that insulation has not rotted from dampness. The boxes themselves may have become corroded and in need of protective paint. The projection booth fuses, switches, panel boxes, generators, projector bases, lamp houses, spot lamps, dimmers, controls also should be gone over with the electrician and projectionist. This check should include lubrication requirements, too.

Make It Thorough

While the manager and his entourage are still way up near the theatre's top a check should be made of fire escape doors leading from there to the street level. A walk down the escapes will reveal whether or not the hand rails are in good condition, whether the outside exit lights are OK, whether the outside of the exit doors needs painting, etc. Toilets on the balcony level should be given a thorough going over to see if the flush valves work properly, if there are any leaks near the plumbing, if any odor is present. The odor of disinfectant is just as objectionable to some people as that of an unclean toilet. A clean toilet requires no chemicals to conceal odors. Make the inspection thorough. See that fixtures are tightly fastened, that there are no loose tiles in the floor or the walls. See that the doors work quietly and that the locks work freely. Check on the lighting. Is it adequate? Are there towel holders in place and are they kept filled at all times? These are small details—but they are most important to patrons who use theatre toilets.

Coming down from the balcony to the orchestra floor the stairs themselves can be given a going over. See that the carpeting or other covering is in good condition with no rips or tears or worn spots that might occasion suits for damages. If the manager sees well enough going down the stairs so that every step can be clearly outlined, there is sufficient light to prevent accident. The handrails also should be checked for safety. Now that the manager and his inspection crew have reached the orchestra, they can check the carpeting on the main floor, and while doing so can check every seat in the theatre to see that they are all secured firmly to the floor with no loose backs or arm rests. Most important is the check for rough or ragged edges to the seats that might cause damage to those slowly returning nylons. Any manager who has listened to the wrath of a woman who has torn her stocking on a theatre seat, knows exactly what is meant here. While going through this check another one can be carried on in an inspection of aisle lights to see if they are working and if they give sufficient light to guide patrons to seats, especially if patrons' eyes have not yet become accustomed to dim lights.

Is the orchestra pit an eye-sore or has it been decorated, or disguised with material, floral decorations, etc.? Has the organ console been checked recently enough so that in an emergency an organist can turn on the motor and deliver a program? The organ and all of its parts are valuable and may cost a fortune some day to rehabilitate if constant checking is not maintained. The drapes, stage curtains, rails around the orchestra pit should constantly be kept in usable condition, even if the theatre manager never expects to use them again in his time.

One other thing—look for an accumulation of gum on floors, seats, orchestra rails or anywhere else the casual or ill-mannered theatre patron may decide to deposit it.

The cleaning and occasional relamping of lighting coves and fixtures should be a constant source of checking for every theatre manager. For here is one of the things that is immediately apparent to theatregoers. A blacked-out lamp is an advertisement of neglect! The lighting in side brackets and coves should be adequate, with aisle lighting, to provide sufficient illumination for patrons to walk up and down theatre aisles without the danger of breaking their necks. The source of a large number of theatre damage suits is based on just this—insufficient inside illumination!

Another important subject entails fire extinguishers which should be polished and ready for use always. When were they last charged? Does every member of the theatre staff actually know how the extinguishers operate and have they seen a demonstration? These are checks that should make the delinquent manager squirm if he can bring himself to think of possible results of neglect along these lines. Are the standpipe cabinets or exposed pipes painted or polished regularly? If the local fire department has not been sufficiently educated or organized to make inspections of this equipment at regular intervals, it should not be taken for granted that the equipment is OK. The theatre manager should do it himself—not delegate it to anyone else unless his staff is sufficiently large that his assistant is a person of reliable character. And then he should check on his assistant! There is no equipment in a theatre more important than the fire prevention outfit!

If the theatre manager himself knows the location of the fire alarm box or boxes in the theatre, has he delegated authority to anyone beside himself to turn in an alarm in case of emergency? If not, he is derelict in his duty to his theatre and to his community!

During the war it often was impossible to install needed inter-communicating telephones between the lobby floor and the booth, between the booth and the manager's office, and between other key points in the theatre where immediate communication might become necessary in the event of emergency. The shortage of this equipment is almost entirely gone and it should be installed in every theatre in the country.

Watch Fuses

Another check that can save theatres from fire peril is on the fusing of every piece of electrical equipment to see that the wiring does not carry more than the load for which it has been installed. Any electrician can tell a manager that when a series of 20 amp. fuses in a box is called for in accordance with the wiring for that particular switch box, that if the fusing is increased to 30 amps. each the possibility of fire from overloading the wiring is increased in direct proportion to the increase in the amperage in the fuses. If necessary, the public utility company supplying electricity to a theatre will send an engineer to make a new check on the capacity of fuses and wiring, and in most cases they will do it without charge.

The location of front lighting switches, what each covers and when they should be turned on and off is knowledge that should be delegated to someone in the theatre. Also someone should be responsible for going to the electricity meter each night when all of the lights have been extinguished to check with a flashlight to see if the meter has stopped running. Theatre managers might be surprised at the amount of power and electricity leakage that could be eliminated if this check were to be established as a routine job. One such instance, discovered in the course of such a check, found the meter to be running and running fast. A check of the entire theatre brought to light the fact that an electrical heater in an organ loft, long forgotten by everyone concerned, was still turned on and that it had heated the organ dutifully every summer and winter and had been doing so for a period of five long years! All that money had gone down the drain when a simple routine check would have revealed it.

Start Thinking

A check-up article of this sort can continue for several more, nay several hundred pages more. But this is intended primarily to stimulate thinking among theatre managers whose myriad duties during the war have prevented them from doing the kind of thorough management job that they know is necessary to present the theatre for which they have been responsible in its best possible light to the public and to reduce repair bills and damage suits to a minimum. Other articles, covering different aspects of maintenance as applied to theatre management, will appear here regularly. In the meantime, it is an excellent idea to commence a practical check-up, started by an inch-by-inch tour of the theatre to discover its frailties.

Following telephone and cable negotiations between Korda in Hollywood and Miss DuMaurier in Cornwall, England, a price of "nearly 100,000 pounds" was agreed upon, with the author participating in the film's profits. Somerset Maugham's "The Razor's Edge." Fritz Kortner will play "Kosti" in the same film and Lucile Watson has also been cast in an important role. Mrs. Showman Goes Studio Strolling

Dear Mr. Exhibitor's Wife:

"The International picture, 'The Dark Mirror,' which stars Olivia de Havilland and Lew Ayres, is now in production. Your personal visits are most welcome."

So reads the official announcement. That's the place for our next visit, so I've made arrangements for us to get on the set. I'm sure many of you would be delighted to see Olivia again. And you Lew Ayres fans will be glad to welcome back your favorite, who has been in the Army for the last four years.

Story is a psychological drama about twin sisters who become involved in a murder, with Olivia playing a dual role and Ayres playing the psychiatrist who tries to unravel the mystery surrounding her. And in a part that will get original and expert handling is Thomas Mitchell as the police inspector.

Direction is under the masterful hand of Robert Siodmak, who has proved his ability at handling this type of picture; and Nunnally Johnson is responsible for the script. All of which makes one feel quite enthusiastic about what the result will be.

Today's set turns out to be the living room of an apartment. This is where Olivia and her sister live. It is just an ordinary room, the kind that a working girl can afford.

We find Olivia and Mitchell seated in front of the fireplace, facing each other. She has on a maroon colored bathrobe, which she must have slipped on over a blue nightgown when she went to answer the doorbell, and her hair is tied back with a ribbon. (She looks more like one of us now, than like the glamor girl we're accustomed to seeing.)

They're going to shoot a split-second shot. Which means, in the vernacular, half now and half later. The reason for this is evident, for Olivia must appear also at the other end of the room, where her twin sister is supposed to be. She is in on this conversation, too.

It is a very difficult scene, for the timing must be accurate and Siodmak is a stickler for this. And several other repeats are necessary to dispose of the cigaret Olivia keeps lighting, and once because Mitchell fluffs a line.

It is finally finished, however, which leaves us free to wander around looking for Ayres' dressing room. We spend quite some time visiting with him; then call on Olivia and from her place stop in to say hello to Mitchell.

On our way back we meet Siodmak who has been busy all this time discussing the forthcoming scene with the crew.

See you soon.

WARNER BROS. Delays Shooting on Two Big Ones; Has Five Pictures Before the Cameras—Last week's announcements from Warners indicated that seven pictures were rolling at Burbank, but because of unexplained circumstances, two of the seven announced did not get under way. They are "Stallion Road" and "Life With Father." Both pictures are due to start shortly, however, and may be in actual production by the time this column appears in print. Even with five films going, though, the studio is doing much better than in former months as far as production activity is concerned.

"Stallion Road," originally scheduled to begin March 18, is to be directed by James Kern, and star Humphrey Bogart, Lauren Bacall and Ronald Reagan. Cast of "Life With Father," to be produced by Robert Buckner, has not been set officially.

Oldest picture on the lot from a shooting standpoint is "Humoresque," which is in its 93rd day. Jerry Wald produces and Jean Negulesco directs a cast headed by Joan Crawford and John Garfield. "The Sentence," starring Ann Sheridan, is in its third month, and "A Very Rich Man," featuring Sydney Greenstreet, is in its seventh week. Recent starters are "Cloak and Dagger," a United States Pictures production starring Gary Cooper and "Cheyenne," which Buckner is currently producing, starring Dennis Morgan, Jane Wyman and Bruce Bennett.

TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX — Has Five Films Rolling, One Set to Go Next Week—This studio is still active on production, with one film finishing and another one ready to go. Five pictures are currently before the lenses, including the two biggest productions of the year for the Zanuck forces. "Forever Amber," with British Peggy Cummins in the lead role, moves into its 19th day. Darryl F. Zanuck is personally producing "The Razor's Edge," from Somerset Maugham's book, which is starting its second week.

Scheduled to roll in April is "My Darling Clementine," a glorified Western, with Linda Darnell and a large cast. Just finished is Sol. M. Wurtzel's second independently produced picture for 20th-Fox release, "Deadline for Murder."

Still going are "Margie," Technicolor musical; "Claudia and David," starring Dorothy McGuire; and "Home Sweet Homicide," with Peggy Ann Garner, Lynn Bari and Randy Scott.

REPUBLIC Starts New Serial; Also Has Three Features Shooting, Including a New Roy Rogers—This week saw Republic start a new serial, "The Crimson Ghost," with Linda Stirling and Charles Quigley. Ron Davidson produces.

Roy Rogers has started his latest musical Western "Under Nevada Skies." Edward J. White is producing.

Other pictures currently before the cameras are "Earl Carroll's Sketchbook," now in its fourth week and "Rendezvous With Annie," just finishing its third week. "Traffic in Crime," starring Kane Richmond and Adele Mara, finished last week, and "Red River Renegades," Sunset Carson Western, ended last week.

A group of Republic personalities announced purchase of 13,000 acres of land between Palm Springs and Twenty-Nine Palms for use as a studio location site and resort. Dick Curtis, Western villain-type actor, is manager of the project.

Within the next ten days, Producer-Director Joseph Kane will put "The Plainsman and the Lady" before the lenses. William Elliott, Vera Hruba Ralston, Joseph Schildkraut and Donald Barry are in the cast.

RKO RADIO Maintains Sharp Production Pace; Goldwyn Release in Question—This studio finished several pictures this week and began several to balance the ouptut. Added scenes were shot on "Desirable Woman," which is now completed to all intents and purposes. "A Likely Story" also wound up final shooting and Walt Disney finished his "Make Mine Music," which is set for a large exploitation campaign.

Most recent starters are an untitled Dick Tracy and "Honeymoon." The second in the Tracy series, based on the popular comic strip, got under way 10 days ago. Morgan Conway plays Tracy. Herman Schlom produces and Gordon Douglas directs. "Honeymoon," starring Shirley Temple, Guy Madison, Franchot Tone and Lina Romay, unfurled one day before the Tracy film.

"Sinbad the Sailor," RKO's Technicolor spectacle, rolls into its fifth week. "Criminal Court," Martin Mooney's initial effort for the studio, is in its fourth week. "What Nancy Wanted" is just finishing the third week.

Currently a big question mark at RKO is Samuel Goldwyn's pictures. Press stories recently carried articles to the effect that Goldwyn's last release for RKO was "The Kid From Brooklyn," and that the next films he makes will be released elsewhere. On Monday Goldwyn is scheduled to start "The Best Years of Our Lives" and Danny Kaye's "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty." Goldwyn officials, when queried would nether confirm nor deny the veracity of the recent press stories.

April 15 is the starting date for "Bella Donna," next on the schedule. Edward Small will produce.

The new stage will include electric eye doors, air conditioning, built-in sound channels and other recent developments. Enterprise will be able to shoot as many as three films concurrently.

First on the huge million-dollar program is "Ramrod," starring Joel McCrea, which is set to roll in two weeks. Harry Sherman produces.

COLUMBIA—Has Busy Shooting Schedule, With Three Set to Roll This Week—This studio has emerged from its production doldrums and is busier than in some time past. March 25 saw "Down to Earth" starting, and also "The Coffin" and "Blondie Knows Best." These three, with "Gallant Journey" and "The Return of Rusty" make a total of five. This does not include "The Jolson Story," which after more than four-and-a-half months before the cameras, may be assumed to have finished, except for minor or last-minute revisions. Another one now completed is "Power of Attorney," which had a brief shooting run.

"Down to Earth," being produced by Don Hartman, is a Technicolor musical with Rita Hayworth, Alexander Hall directs. "The Coffin," third in the "I Love a Mystery" series, features Karen Morley, Jim Bannon and others. Wallace MacDonald produces and Henry Levin directs.

"Rio," another big musical Columbia plans for imminent production, is in rehearsal, with star Ann Miller setting up her numerous dance routines.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER Has Six Films Rolling, With One Likely to Start—MGM is at normal production pace these days. Six films are going and "A Woman of My Own," to star Greer Garson and Robert Montgomery, may start soon.

"Fiesta," starring Esther Williams, is ending its third month of shooting, having been in Mexico for some time. Richard Thorpe directs. "Till the Clouds Roll By," which has been before the cameras since January 24, is still going, with Arthur Freed producing and Richard Whorf directing. "You Were There," Robert Taylor-Katherine Hepburn starrer, starts its third month before the lenses next week. "The Showoff," starring Red Skelton, Marilyn Maxwell and Marjorie Main, has been shooting almost two months.

Comparatively recent starters are "Tenth Avenue Angel," with Margaret O'Brien and George Murphy, and "My Brother Who Talked to Horses," starring little Butch Jenkins. Latest addition to this cast is Charlie Ruggles.

marquee names this would be a fine box-office bet. As it is, however, it should do better than the average Western.

Cast: Eddie Dean, Al LaRue, Emmett Lynn, Jean Carlin, Robert Malcolm, Charles King, Robert Barron, Forrest Taylor, Bob Duncan, Jack O'Shea, Terry Frost. Credits: Produced and directed by Robert Emmett. Original screenplay by Frances Kavanaugh. Cinecolor supervisor, Arthur Phelps. Photography, Marcel LePicard.

Plot: Eddie Dean and his pal Al LaRue, scouts for a wagon train ,arrive at the point where the wagon train members are to stake out homestead claims when they find that the town has been taken over by two land crooks, Robert Barron and Forrest Taylor. Dean's lifelong friend, the marshal, has been murdered. Dean and LaRue enlist Emmett Lynn and his two outlaw friends as deputies and restore law and order to the community.

Comment: This is very much better than the average Western from the standpoint of story, production, direction and action. If it had been made by one of the major companies with a marquee name or two added it would have been a fine box-office bet. "The Caravan Trail" has the advantage of some new twists to some old situations, thus giving the film an impression of fresh approach. Suspense is really suspense, and not just a trite situation. The action is all that an action fan could ask for, with the fisticuffs of short but violent duration, and when a gun goes off somebody usually gets hit. Strangely enough, this western has what most horse operas lack: realism. Another factor that adds to the picture's entertainment value is that writer Frances Kavanaugh has used what appears to be a much better than fair knowledge of psychology of the theatre in building suspense. As for the players, Eddie Dean looks the part, sings well, but has a mild tendency to overplay dramatics. Emmett Lynn acts well as a tough, revengeful gunman of the time. He makes the character more likable than the script calls for—tough enough for any actor to do. The others are competent western players, which says not too much or too little for them. As a whole. "The Caravan Trail" is thoroughly satisfying, entertaining Western fare. It should please all types of audiences and delight the action fans.

Gay Blades

Republic Comedy 67 mins.

AUDIENCE SLANT: (Family) Nice, entertaining light comedy with exciting ice hockey games as a background.

BOX-OFFICE SLANT: Good for double bill programs.

Cast: Allan Lane, Jean Rogers, Edward Ashley, Frank Albertson, Anne Gillis, Robert Armstrong, Paul Harvey, Ray Walker, Jonathan Hale, Russell Hicks, Emmett Vogan, Edward Gargan, Nedrick Young. Credits: Associate producer and director, George Blair. Screenplay by Marcel Klauber from a magazine story by Jack Goodman and Albert Rice. Photography, William Bradford.

Plot: Talent scout Jean Rogers searches for a virile, he-man type to play the lead in her studio's new movie, "The Behemoth." She finds professional hockey star Allan Lane, who plays to let off steam and earn enough money to start his career as an architect. She tries to convince him that Hollywood is his dish, but he ignores her advice because he is in love with her. She finally sees things his way: he resumes hockey and she quits her movie job to be with him.

Comment: The direction and production of "Gay Blades" are uniformly of fairly high class and the competent cast plays a fairly well written screenplay with a satisfying degree of skill. That the film doesn't quite attain the "very good" status but remains nice, light comedy, is apparently not the fault of anyone but rather a case of story weakness. The hockey game scenes are exciting at times, the three leads are pleasant and in all "Gay Blades" provides audiences with a fairly diverting 67 minutes, which evidently is just what it was designed to do.

Kronenberg Named WB Special Events Head

Promotion of Abe Kronenberg to the post of special events manager and eastern representative of the commercial tieups division, working under Larry Golob, director of publicity in the east, was announced this week by Mort Blumenstock, Warner Bros.' vice-president in charge of advertising and publicity. Kronenberg succeds Will Yolen, who has resigned to join station WNEW.

Kronenberg, who has been with the company seven years in connection with exploitation and promotional activities both at the home office and in the field, originally worked out of the New York exchange, after which he was elevated to handle special assignments as a member of the home office publicity staff. He has been identified with all big Warner film campaigns for the past six years.

Assisting Kronenberg on commercial tieups will be Dan Karsch and Jack Kingsley, while Reggie Rose and Steve Brener will work with him on special events. Kingsley and Rose have just returned to Warners after four years in the Army.

SHORT SUBJECT REVIEWS

Snow Eagles (Excellent)

WB (2505) Sports Parade 10 mins.

This interesting, exciting short contains practical instructional information for the prospective ski enthusiast. It is highlighted by scenes of the late Hermann Gadner, famous ski instructor, as he put a class of hopefuls through preliminary instruction. Later, the same class is shown doing some fancy skiing down the ski trails at St. Jovite in Quebec. The Technicolor outdoor shots are breath-taking. An excellent short for any program.

Baby Bottleneck (Very funny)

WB (1716) Looney Tunes 7 mins.

When overwork breaks down the Stork's delivery system, Daffy and Porky try to modernize the service with a Rube Golbergian endless belt conveyer system. They get tangled up in their own invention and end up by being delivered to a waiting mamma gorilla. Very funny cartoon in Technicolor.

Movieland Magic (Good)

WB (2003) Technicolor Special 20 mins.

By using the device of taking audiences with a young movie star as she goes through her daily routine at the studio, the producers provide an interesting background for the musical numbers which make up the film. How Warner Bros. ever will get back their investment on this one is a mystery, for it contains lavish sets, production numbers in which a score or more players in various costumes flit in and out and also uses such names as Jane Wyman, Dennis Morgan, John Payne, Fuzzy Knight and Cliff Edwards in the numbers. A little long but good entertainment and very much exploitable.

Elmer's Hare Remover (Excellent)

WB (1717) Merrie Melodies 7 mins.

That this Bugs Bunny short is not as funny as some of the others in the series does not remove it from the category of "excellent." Elmer tries to outperform Jekyll and Hyde with a screwy concoction and captures Bugs for experimentation. Bugs, as usual, outwits befuddled Elmer with the usual funny results. In Technicolor.

ADVISORY COUNCIL

How Large Your Screen Should Be and Is It Wise to Re-Surface It?

No. 14—A Continuing Series of Reports by Experts on Problems of Vital Importance

IDEAL SIZE for a theatre screen, desirability of re-surfacing screens, and war-developed improvements relating to this vital item of theatre equipment were canvassed at this month's Council meeting with complete unanimity of opinion on some important points and the widest possible difference on others.

But there was no difference of opinion as to the tremendous importance all members of the Council attribute to the screen —"the focal point of greatest interest to the audience"—"the most observed surface in the theatre." What to do about that surface and how best to do it occupied their attention.

"Do you favor the smallest practicable picture for the sake of a brighter image?" we asked. "Or the largest practicable picture? Or a compromise?"

Want Large Pictures

It turned out that nobody approved the small picture. "With the help of high intensity lamps and present day optical assemblies, any picture brilliance can be arrived at for any picture size."—"Don't reduce size to save on light."—"First decide what screen size to use and then provide equipment to illuminate it properly. There are definitely lamps in the market to meet any condition of screen size."—"Use high intensity lamps."

There was no dissent. Opinion was unanimous. Lighting difficulties are to be met by using proper equipment, not by reducing the size of the picture, according to all the council members.

However, not all of them wanted the largest image the proscenium opening would allow. Some did. Some favored a smaller size on esthetic grounds.

Some of the first group said: "As much picture as possible."—"I favor as big a screen as possible."—"We believe that the size of the picture should be good in proportion to the size of the proscenium opening."—"As large as possible."—"Largest possible."

Others preferred to follow the recommended SMPE standard, which (as set forth on Page E-21 of STR for March 2nd) is a picture width equal to one-sixth the distance from the screen to the last row of seats.

Still others suggested different standards to be used as a guide.

"One foot in width for each four to five feet of throw," was one of these.

"A minimum visual angle of 12.8 degrees from the eye of the observer in the last row of seats and a maximum of 54 degrees from the eye of the observer in the first row of seats," was another suggestion.

Some members felt that definite standards were inadvisable. "It is a matter of technical advice and good judgment," one contributed. "Depends entirely upon the architecture," thought another. "No set ruling holds good," volunteered a third, adding, "There are so many variations in sizes of proscenium arches in relation to the overall sizes of the auditorium that good judgment in selecting the proper size is most important."

Still another said: "Too great an emphasis on large screens can cause the artistic value of many productions to be destroyed; too small a screen will detract from the artistic quality of others. At all times it must be borne in mind that you are serving paying patrons, and your deductions and conclusions must be based on what you believe to be their desires."

Re-Surfacing Screens

We then asked: "Do you favor re-surfacing screens?"

The replies were remarkable on one point—it appears that some members favor re-surfacing but not painting; others are all for painting and oppose re-surfacing; some favor both processes and some will have no part of either! Some of those who approved qualified their approval. "If the re-surfacing can be done in a manner that will not reduce the perforated area," one member explained, adding that "very careful thought must be given to the type of material used and the type of workmanship. There are very successful screen re-surfacing companies operating today and their work has been satisfactory."

Another member favored re-surfacing

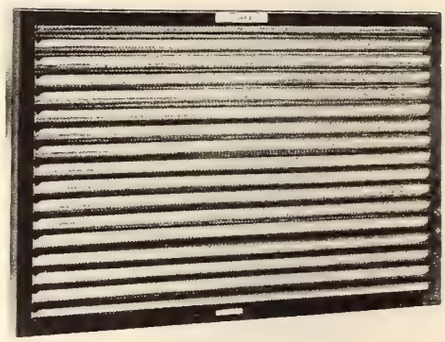
Presenting: Apparatus Parts and Complete Systems for Air Conditioning

AN IMMENSE VARIETY of apparatus is available to the theatre for conditioning air. The showman has his choice among units that differ not only in structural detail but even in basic principles of operation. Here are shown some typical apparatus components that can be purchased separately and combined into conditioning systems, or added to existing systems; also factoryassembled units that are delivered complete and need only to be connected up to ducts, plumbing and power.

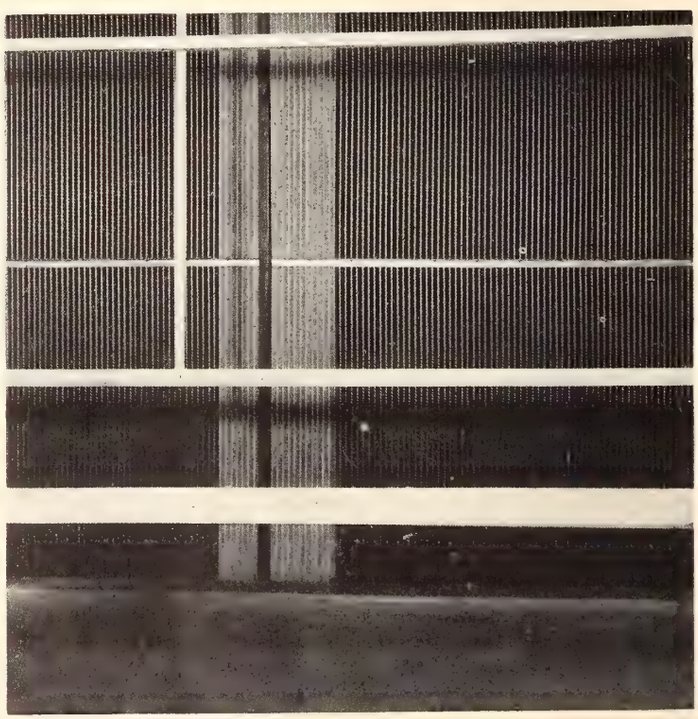
AIR DIFFUSER

KNO-DRAFT TYPE K diffusers for ceiling mounting have adjusting screws on the under side of the unit. The adjustment is designed to adapt air diffusion to any ceiling height. It can also be changed with the seasons to eject cooled air horizontally and heated air downward.

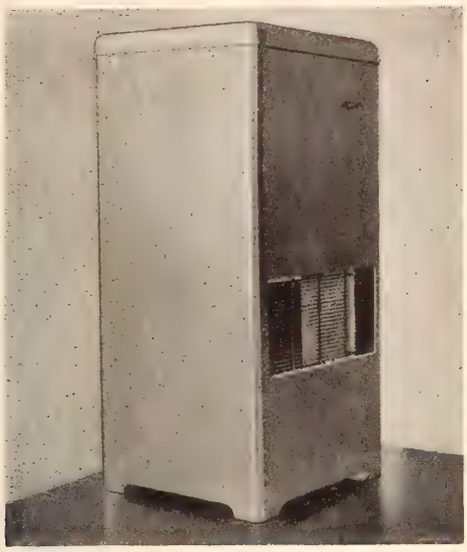


EVAPORATIVE COOLER

BUENSOD - STACEY'S Evaporative Cooler and Air Washer — picture shows leaving side. The interior is a spraying chamber through which air passes, then zig-zags out between corrugated baffles. These extract the spray from the air; the water collects on them and runs down. The vertical lines in the picture are the thin ends of the baffles. Tap water or refrigerated water may be used; the latter gives better results in high-humidity climates.

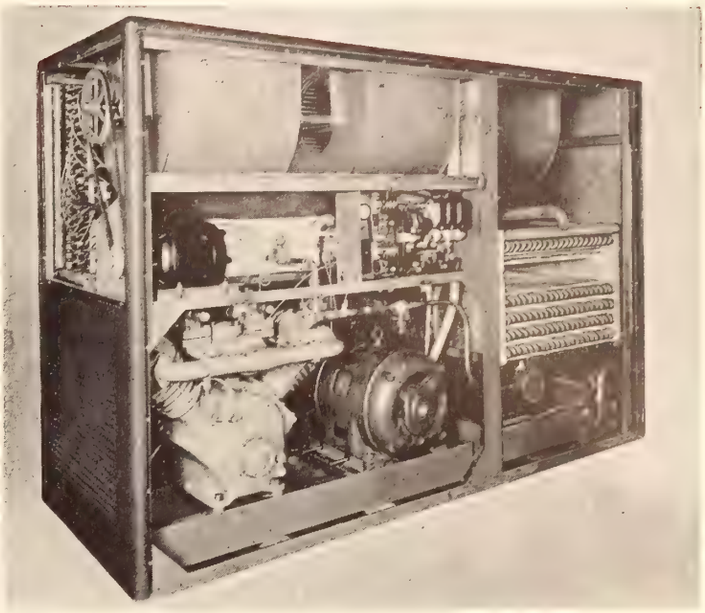


EVAPORATIVE COOLER

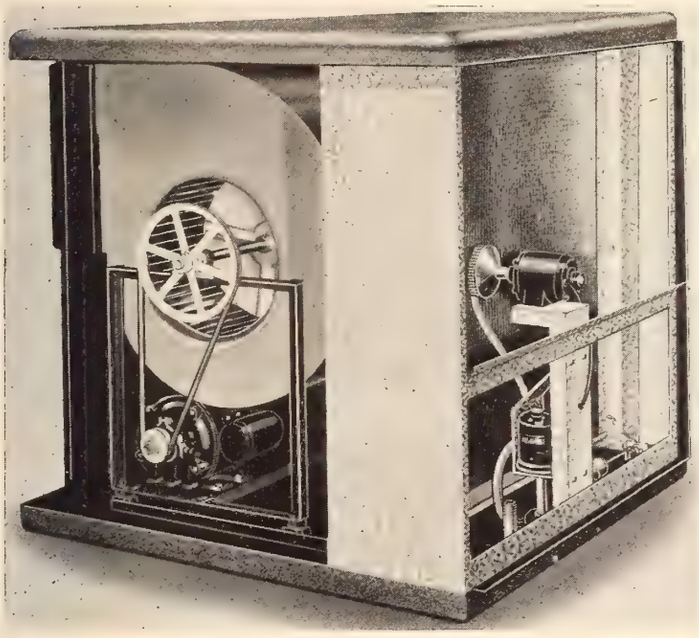


AIR & Refrigeration Corp.'s Evaporative Cooler and Air Washer. The sloping cells, filled with glass filaments, are sprayed by nozzles mounted on the horizontal pipes. Incoming air passes through the spray, through the innumerable streams of water that run down along the glass filaments, and through the rain that drips from the under side of the cells. Tap water or refrigerated water may be used; the latter gives better results in high-humidity climates.

ACTIVATED CARBON FILTER



W. B. CONNOR Engineering Corp.'s filter—designed to remove accumulating odors and gaseous impurities from air re-circulated by conditioning systems—acts on the principle of the gas mask. These perforated metal tubes are filled with carbon granules.

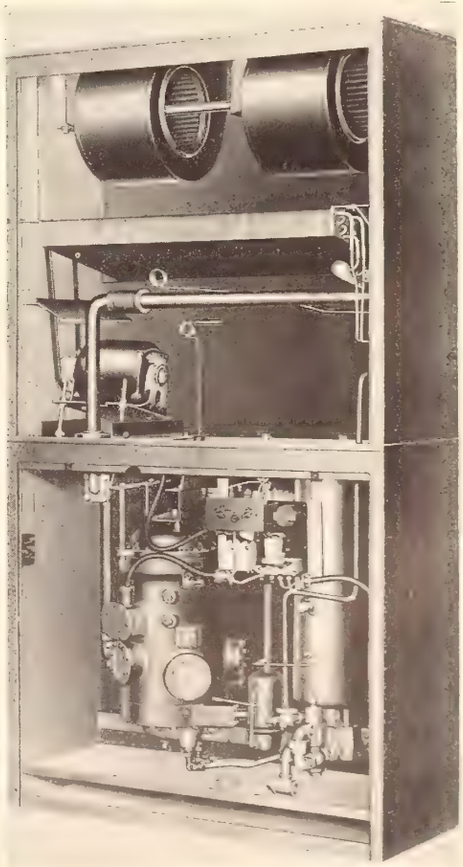


AIR FRESHENER

AIRKEM Air Freshener unit, containing reservoir, pump, spray nozzles, excelsior cartridge and fan. Used anywhere. Airkem, a solution of chemicals including chlorophyll, the green coloring matter of plants, is sprayed on the excelsior. The spray can be adjusted according to the amount of odor or stuffiness present. Air blown through the excelsior by the fan evaporates the solution and carries the chemicals out into the theatre. Other, similar models are used with air conditioning systems; see Page E-26.

REFRIGERATOR CONDITIONING SYSTEM

UNITED STATES AIR CONDITIONING Corp.'s refrigerated Kooler-Aire combines cooling and dehumidifying units, refrigeration compressor and evaporative condenser in one balanced assembly. Kooler-Aires are made in capacities of from 5 to 25 tons. Single units or multiples of several units will satisfactorily handle any condition, in any climate. If distributing ducts, plumbing and power supply are prepared in advance, actual installation of a unit takes only a few hours.



REFRIGERATOR CONDITIONING SYSTEM

CHRYSLER CORP.'S AIRTEMP Division manufactures equipment for theatres of all sizes but recommends this 5 H. P. "package" conditioner for houses up to 750 seats. It is delivered complete, ready to work as soon as power and plumbing are connected. Distributing duct-work can be eliminated or reduced to short runs. If more than one is installed, "packages" can be operated by zones; in that way, the cooling effect is not wasted on unoccupied areas.

EVAPORATIVE CONDITIONING SYSTEM

S.O.S. CINEMA SUPPLY Corp.'s air conditioning system unit using evaporative cooling. A small, motor-driven rotary atomizer spreads a spray of water evenly over a treated wood-fibre filter mat, through which the large blower forces a stream of air. The water is recirculated, but an automatic solenoid switch shuts it off when relative humidity reaches 75%, unless refrigerated water is used. The latter gives better results in high-humidity climates.

AIR FILTER

CARRIER Air Conditioning filter bank. There are 1,000 filter units in this installation at Radio City's Center Theatre. All of them are carefully vacuumed each week, yielding about two bucketsful of dirt particles. Air does not enter the conditioning equipment until it has passed through this filter. Chief Engineer William Stark is shown examining one of the units.

IT BROKE THE CHAINS

THAT HELD THE PROJECTIONIST TO THE LAMPHOUSE!

Twenty years ago Harry H. Strong produced the fully automatic arc control for projection arcs, thereby breaking the chains which shackled projectionists to their lamps.

This is our 20th Anniversary.

The 20 years which Strong engineers, technicians and craftsmen have spent in studying the screen lighting needs of the theatre and building the various types of projection arcs which met these requirements have given our company a great advantage in "know-how." To all of those who have played a part in the developments we want to express our sincerest appreciation. We are also truly grateful to our many exhibitor friends for their support of our efforts . . . support translated into orders . . . orders which permitted us to grow to the position of world's largest manufacturer of projection arc lamps.

We trust that in the years to come we can celebrate many more happy birthdays together . . . that we will have continued to merit your good wishes.

Air Cooling is Not Enough

Only Draft-Free Conditioning Can Boost Box-Office

By GEORGE R. WALLEN

Anemostat Corporation of America

DRAFTS ARE an old story and cold story, but when drafts and the accompanying discomforts—stale air-pockets . . . plus uneven temperatures and humidity—mean dollars lost at the box office, theatre operators get hot under the collar! It is then they realize that the air-conditioning system installed for comfort and better box-office can sometimes mean only discomfort and "sick" box-office!

When air-conditioning was first introduced in theatres, it was pounced upon by the industry as the answer to complaints against the insufferable heat and stuffiness of most theatres—particularly during the summer months. Theatre fronts were promptly emblazoned with posters and banners which fairly shouted: "COOL INSIDE!", "AIR-CONDITIONED!", "NEVER OVER 70°!"—and theatregoers went for it—until they learned that air-conditioning in a theatre didn't necessarily and always provide the kind of comfort they anticipated.

They discovered, instead, that theatre air-conditioning could mean drafts . . . followed by sore throats or nose-colds; that unbalanced temperatures and uncontrolled humidity could make patrons perspire as much in the theatre as they would in the sun outside. The first flurry of enthusiasm for theatre air-conditioning soon wore off. In fact, enthusiasm sometimes became apprehension. Box-office fell, too, often even below summer level. Air-conditioning as a box-office booster had boomeranged!

Then came the $64 question—"WHY?" And with it, the $64 answer.

It was found that the cause of drafts from air-conditioning—in fact, the cause of many atmospheric discomforts of air-conditioning, lay not in the conditioning of the air, but in the distribution of the conditioned air. In other words, theatre operators learned from their engineers that air-cooling alone is not enough; that only with air-cooling plus perfected air-diffusion at the duct outlet could they hope to provide the healthful air-comfort that would boost box-office receipts.

Distribution Problems

Originally, the design of grilles and registers used as air-conditioning duct-outlets was based solely on the appearance and the size necessary to pass the required volumes of air for heating purposes. However, such outlets, though suited to the distribution of heated air, were found completely inadequate when cooled air was passed through them. For, when the heavier, cooled air left these same grilles and registers, it fell upon the audience so quickly there was no time for it to mix with the warmer theatre air at the ceiling level. The audience, therefore, was constantly subject to severe drafts. And, in addition, the discomforts from stagnant air-pockets, uneven temperature and humidity variances, aggravated the condition further.

The first attempt to solve the problem pinned the trouble to the outlet. In trying to prevent this cold wave of air from being "dumped" on the theatre patrons, engineers proposed the introduction of less-cool air in larger volumes through the same grilles and registers. But very often the increased air-volumes produced even greater drafts; and, though the air was less-cool, patron-discomfort was the same. Engineers, therefore, deduced that ordinary grilles and registers should either be improved or replaced if air-conditioning in theatres was to provide ideal air-comfort.

The first new outlet device was a simple

The Senator Theatre, Baltimore, Md., achieves an unusual effect in the foyer by suspending its indirect lighting fixtures from the Anemostats.

The U. S. Army Motion Picture Theatre, Presidio, Cal. The circular shape of the Anemostats was used as the basis for the theatre's modern-designed ceiling.

pan-type arrangement. It consisted of a pan or plaque installed at the duct opening in the ceiling. Its function was to block and divert the cool incoming air, thereby preventing it from falling immediately to the audience level. The principle was correct—to slow down the velocity of the incoming air so it could mix with the air in the theatre. But this, too, often failed. It was found that the movement of the air after it hit the pan was dictated by the shape and construction of the ceiling. Therefore, the air left the duct, struck the pan, flowed horizontally along the ceiling until it reached the walls. The air then clung to the walls as it fell ineffectually to the floor. There was still no control of the incoming conditioned air; no over-all mixture of the incoming air with the theatre air; no air-diffusion.

The Solution

It was only after several years of constant, thorough-going research that the problem of drafts finally resolved into this fact: Drafts and other disconcerting atmospheric conditions can be eliminated only when the air-conditioning system embodies air-diffusers which distribute conditioned air equally throughout the theatre, and in proper proportion to the air in the theatre. The essential requirement was to design an air-diffuser which would mix the conditioned air with the theatre air well above the audience level before the air-mixture was diffused.

Twenty-five years ago, such an air-diffuser was developed, under the name of Anemostat Air-Diffuser. Today it is being used in theatres stretching from Montreal, Canada to Presidio, California—and providing real air-conditioning comfort.

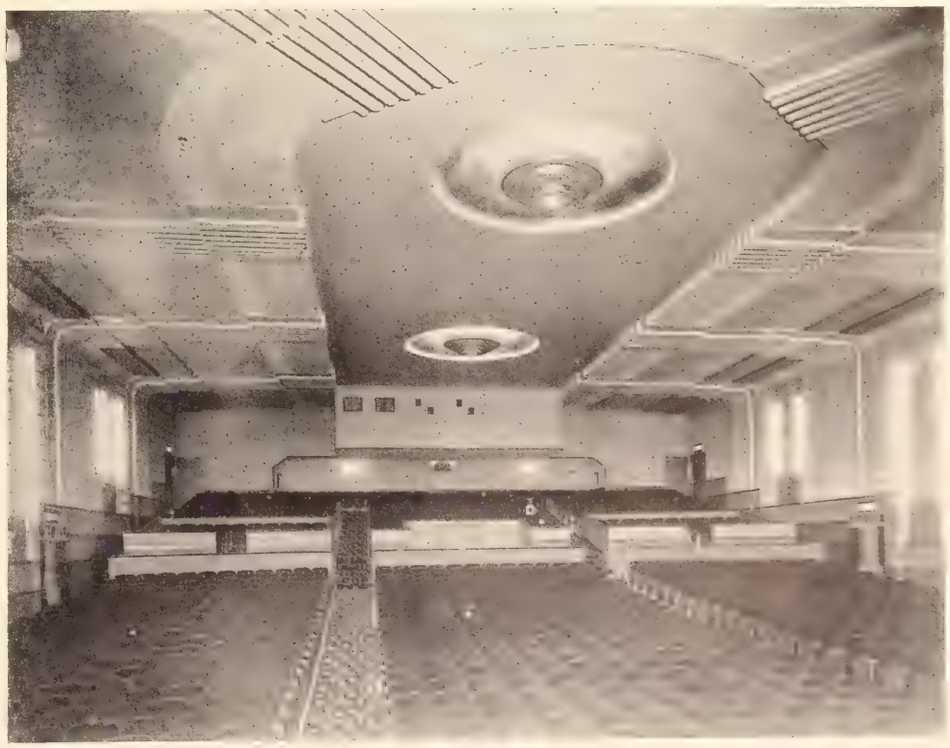
The name Anemostat stems from the Greek—"Anemo," meaning air flow . . . and "Stat," meaning control or regulate! hence, Anemostat for controlled or regulated air-flow.

These air-diffusers, scientifically designed properly to distribute conditioned air pre-mixed with theatre air are strategically located throughout the theatre. Therefore such obstacles as pillars, putting walls, and balcony construction no longer present serious problems to air-conditioning engineers.

Typical Installations

A conventional three-Anemostat installation is shown in the accompanying view of the York Theatre in Montreal, Canada. In this theatre, two ceiling units were specified by the engineers (replacing outmoded grilles) as sufficient to handle the air-diffusion for the entire lower seating floor. The third unit—a wall-type—was installed in the center of the theatre's rear wall to supply conditioned air to the balcony area. This wall-type air-diffuser operates in the same manner as the ceiling-types, except that it diffuses air in only a 180° radius.

The U. S. Army Motion Picture Theatre at Presidio, California, (pictured at left) required six ceiling-type Anemostats to carry off and pre-mix the proper proportion of theatre air with incoming conditioned air for fullest air-comfort. Here, as the illustration shows, the circular shape of the air-diffuser was used as the basis for the theatre's modern-designed ceiling.



The accompanying photographs of Anemostat installations indicate further design possibilities to which this air-diffuser lends itself. Many theatre operators have struck varied design motifs by fitting this unit into the lighting arrangement. On the other hand, in several newly-built theatres, the lighting scheme was designed around the shape of the device with truly unusual effect.

To properly understand the operation of the Anemostat, a "look inside" will help.

This air-diffuser is quickly and easily fastened to the duct outlet. When air of any duct velocity reaches this patented device, it passes through a series of metal cones, fixed one inside the other (see the cross-section on page E-23). The velocity of the supply air is instantly reduced by air-expansion within the flaring metal cones. This air-expension converts the velocity energy of the air into a pressure blanket on the theatre air beneath the diffuser.

The metal cones are formed in such a

THE NEWS IN A NUTSHELL

New Western Union light source, said to be ten times as efficient as existing lamps. Two-watt size between thumb and forefinger; center, a 100-watt lamp.

Look at it or look through it—American Optical Co.'s new transparent mirror glass.

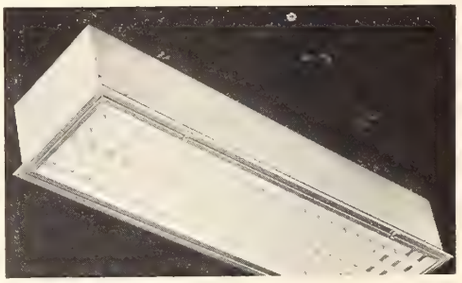
BLOSSOM BY BLOSSOM the Spring begins, as the feller said, and item by item postwar production begins to sprout. There's no lavish display of it, but deliveries are easing just a little, dealers' shelves are filling very slowly,—and best of all, manufacturers tell STR they have "only one or two bottlenecks left."

For example, an official of RCA says with respect to soundheads: "Nothing is holding us back now any more, except motors. Soon as we can get them, we'll roll."

Alexander Smith & Sons Carpet Company report no further shortage of materials at all. Their only remaining bottleneck is labor.

Forest Manufacturing Corporation is now making immediate deliveries on rectifiers, including the 30-60 ampere tube type and four different magnesium types. As of April 1st, the new Forest model Twin-65 tube type rectifier will be available for instant delivery. The new rectifier will feature remote control, failure-proof natural cooling, and provisions for operating spot lights.

On the other hand, Forest still cannot deliver lamps with equal promptness, and the company's plans for increasing lamp production have been stymied for the present by increasing parts shortages.



Postwar Products

The company plans a number of new postwar products, however. One, an ozone generator based on a quartz tube emitting ultra-violet light, is expected to be on the market in April. Germ and odor destruction are effected by two different agents—the ultra violet light and the ozone created by that light. Cost to theatres up to 500 seats is expected to be about $100. Another development will be an entirely new type of fire safety control, based on a war-created electrical conductor that changes its resistance enormously with increase in temperature, and can be set to close projection room

Some ABC'S of AIR CONDITIONING

. . . A Non-Technical Outline of What the Different Kinds of Apparatus Do, and How They Do It

SIX DIFFERENT things are done to the air in a complete conditioning system. Cooling is only one of them. Not all theatre systems are complete. Some of the six operations may be omitted for economy's sake. The complete installation modifies the air in these ways:

Changes its temperature.
Changes its moisture content.
Removes its dust.
Mixes it with fresh air from outdoors.
Circulates it about the theatre.
Removes its germs and odors.

Apparatus for doing these things varies not only in structural detail but even in method of operation. There is often more than one way of achieving the same result.

Cooling

Two different methods may be used in cooling air. One involves mechanical refrigeration. The other takes more direct advantage of the cooling effect created by evaporating water. This latter, being simpler, will be considered first.

Water can be made to evaporate by warming it but also—and very effectively—by spreading it out to increase its surface area. Water left to stand in a glass will not all dry out for days or weeks, even in the hottest summer weather; if the same amount is soaked into a cloth which is then spread to dry the water will be gone in a few hours. The cloth distributes it over the enormous surface area provided by all the threads and fibers and it can evaporate from all points simultaneously. In the glass everything below the top layer must wait its turn.

In evaporative cooling "cells" of fibrous material may be provided; the water trickles through this and, clinging to the fibers, is divided into a multitude of separate streams with a corresponding increase in the amount of surface exposed. Sprays may be used instead, the liquid being split into tiny drops, from all of which evaporation proceeds simultaneously; or there may be a combination arrangement in which the spray is directed against a fibrous surface, the water trickling down.

In these systems incoming warm air is made to mingle very intimately with the spray or trickling water or both. Warmth also promotes evaporation.

The cooling effect thus produced reduces the dry bulb temperature of the air.

This system of cooling has strict limits. If the incoming air is very humid the cooling effect will be small since evaporation does not take place when air already holds all the water it can, and only to a slight extent when it is nearly saturated. The method is widely used, however, in dry climates, and also where large supplies of really cold well water are available. When it is used in other locations the water may be circulated through mechanical refrigeration equipment, or less drastically treated in cooling towers.

Refrigeration

Refrigerating apparatus has four essential parts: an evaporator, a compressor, a condenser and an expansion valve. These constitute a closed system inside which refrigerant circulates.

Many common substances can be used as refrigerants, including ammonia and chloroform. Refrigerants that are presented to the public under trade names usually are low-boiling hydrocarbons or halogenated hydrocarbons. In every case they are substances that evaporate readily at low temperature. As it goes round its path inside the apparatus the refrigerant changes from a liquid to a gas and is condensed back to a liquid again.

Most of the evaporation occurs in the evaporator, and it is in this unit that the refrigerating or cooling action takes place. As the liquid turns into a gas it chills the coils or pipes through which it flows; they in turn cool the incoming air, or the water which is later used to cool air.

The refrigerant leaves the evaporator in gaseous form, and must be changed back to a liquid so it can go through the same process again. To accomplish this, it is first put under pressure by the compressor, which may be either a piston-and-cylinder device or of the rotary type, thence it proceeds under high pressure to the condenser. It is also quite hot as a result of the compression.

A gas under high pressure is easily converted to liquid. (The opposite also is true; liquids under low pressure turn readily to gas; everyone has read that cooking is impossible on very high mountains because water boils without becoming hot.) The gas in the condenser, its pressure being high, can be converted to liquid by a cooling coil carrying ordinary tap water, or even by air at summer temperatures.

From the condenser the liquid refrigerant goes to the expansion valve. Here it is suddenly released from pressure. Immediately that happens it begins to evaporate; and begins to cool itself by so doing. It then enters the evaporator, where it continues to evaporate, cooling the coils through which it flows and thus exercising a refrigerating action on air or water in contact with those coils. Thence it passes again to the compressor, and so on, round and round.

De-Humidifying

The effective humidity of air—that which is felt by human beings as comfort or discomfort—is always relative to the temperature. It is therefore called relative humidity, inasmuch as the colder air becomes, the less moisture it can hold. Thus, air entering the theatre through the system may be carrying no more moisture than before it was cooled, but by the fact that its temperature is lower it is nearer to the point of holding all it can. Hence, it no longer takes up perspiration as readily as it should, and the effect upon the audience is that of a chill, clammy dampness, highly unpleasant.

The theatre is always warmer than the chamber in which the air is undergoing conditioning, because of the really large amounts of heat radiated by the bodies of the audience. Many air conditioning systems therefore do not use special, additional, dehumidifiers. The air may enter the theatre at a high relative humidity in some of these system, but it promptly warms up and its relative humidity declines proportionately. A degree of dehumidifying accompanies all cooling. Where cooling coils are used, condensation takes place on these coils, surplus moisture running down into a pan or other receptacle to be drained away. In evaporative cooling systems the water spray or dripping fibers take up and carry off the excess.

More positive de-humidifying is effected

Learn to Understand Their Language

A Glossary of Air Conditioning Words and Phrases Used by Consulting Engineers*

Adiabatic: An adjective descriptive of a process in which no heat is added to or extracted from the system executing the process.

Air Cleaner: A device designed for the purpose of removing air-borne impurities such as dusts, fumes and smokes. (Air cleaners include air washers and air filters.)

Air Conditioning: The simultaneous control of all or at least the first three of those factors affecting both the physical and chemical conditions of the atmosphere within any structure. These factors include temperature, humidity, motion, distribution, dust, bacteria, odors and toxic gases, most of which affect in greater or lesser degree human health or comfort.

Air Washer: An enclosure in which air is forced through a spray of water in order to cleanse, humidify, or dehumidify the air.

Anemometer: An instrument for measuring the velocity of moving air.

Baffle: A plate or wall for deflecting gases or fluids.

Blast Heater: A set of heat transfer coils or sections used to heat air which is drawn or forced through it by a fan.

Boiler Heating Surface: That portion of the surface of the heat-transfer apparatus in contact with the fluid being heated on one side and the gas or refractory being cooled on the other, in which the fluid being heated forms part of the circulating system; this surface shall be measured on the side receiving heat. This includes the boiler, water walls, water screens, and water floor.

Boiler Horsepower: The equivalent evaporation of 34.5 lb. of water per hour from and at 212 F. This is equal to a heat output of 970.3 x 34.5 = 33,475 BTU per hour.

British Thermal Unit: A unit of energy defined in terms of the international steam-table calorie through the convenient relation 1 BTU per pound per degree Fahrenheit = 1 cal per gram per degree Centigrade. It is approximately the quantity of heat required to raise the temperature of 1 lb. of liquid water from 63 to 64 F.

By-pass: A pipe or duct, usually controlled by valve or damper, for conveying a fluid around a main control valve or damper.

Calorie: (Large calorie or I.T. kilocalorie) is equal to 1000 international steam-table calories = 1/860 international kilowatt hour. For practical purposes it may be considered as 1/100 of the heat required to raise the temperature of 1 kilogram of water from 0 to 100 C.

Central Fan System: A mechanical indirect system of heating, ventilating, or air conditioning, in which the air is treated or handled by equipment located outside the rooms served usually at a central location, and is conveyed to and from the rooms by means of a fan and a system of distributing ducts.

Chimney Effect: The tendency in a duct or other vertical air passage for air to rise when heated, owing to its decrease in density.

Coefficient of Heat Transmission: The amount of heat (BTU) transmitted from air to air in one hour per square foot of the wall, floor, roof or ceiling for a difference in temperature of 1 F between the air on the inside and that on the outside of the wall, floor, roof or ceiling.

Comfort Air Conditioning: The process by which simultaneously the temperature, moisture content, movement and quality of the air in enclosed spaces intended for human occupancy may be maintained within required limits.

Comfort Line: The effective temperature at which the largest percentage of adults feels comfortable.

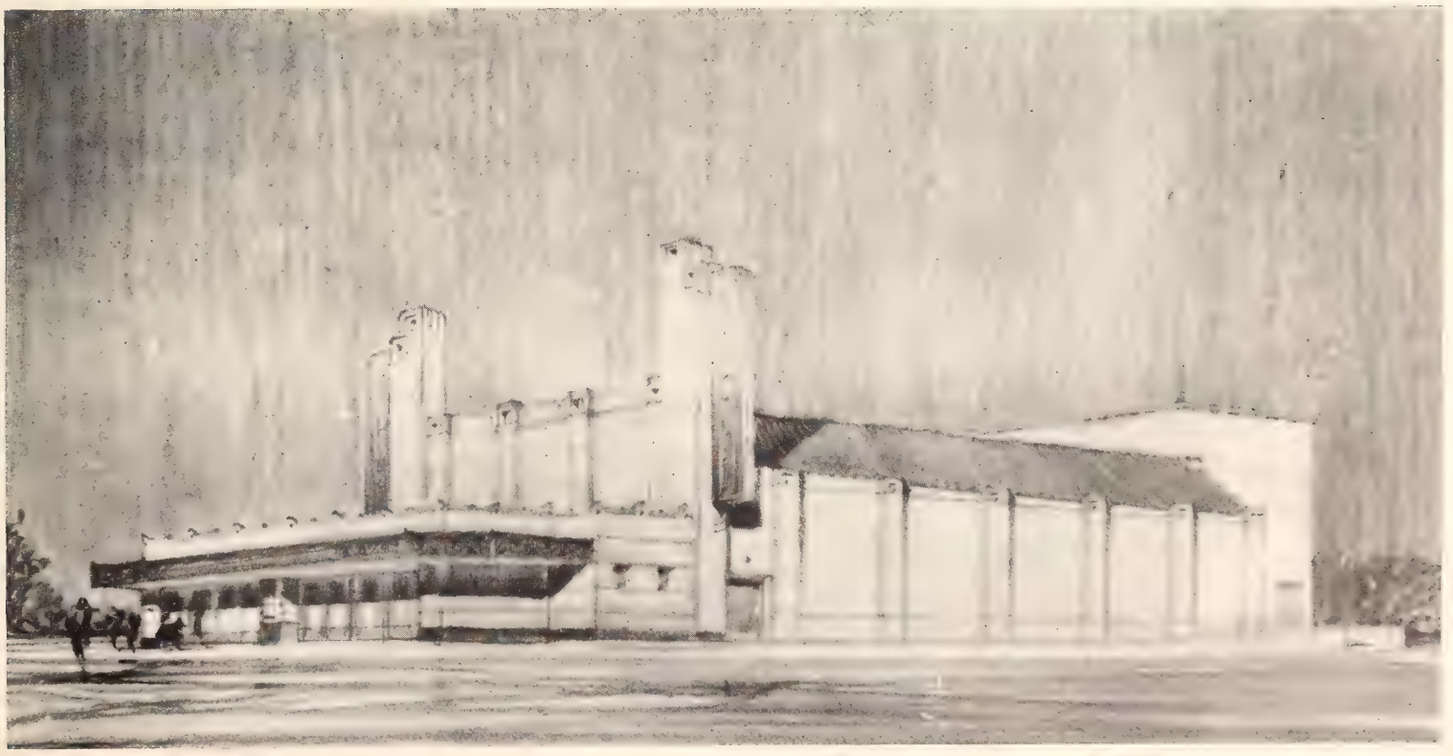
Comfort Zone (Average): The range of effective temperatures over which the majority (50 per cent or more) of adults feel comfortable. Comfort Zone (Extreme): The range of effective temperatures over which one or more adults feel comfortable.

Concealed Radiator: A heating device located within, adjacent to, or exterior to the room being heated but so covered or enclosed or concealed that the heat transfer surface of the device, which may be either a radiator or a convector, is not visible from the room. Such a device transfers its heat to the room largely by convection air currents.

Conductance: The amount of heat (BTU) transmitted from surface to surface in one hour through one square foot of a material or construction, whatever its thickness, when the temperature difference is 1 F between the two surfaces.

Conduction: The transmission of heat through and by means of matter unaccompanied by any obvious motion of the matter.

Conductivity: The amount of heat (BTU) transmitted in one hour through one square foot of a homogenous material 1 in. thick (or 1 ft.) for a difference in temperature of 1 F between the two surfaces of the material.



Conductor (Heat): A material capable of readily conducting heat. The opposite of an insulator or insulation.

Convection: The transmission of heat by the circu-in B and C houses only; another "only if great care is taken not to fill up the perforations; still another, "only if the work is done by experts." And some thought re-surfacing should be limited to small houses where low gross returns make economy imperative.

Others gave a flat, emphatic "No" to the question. They divided into two groups; those who preferred painting and those who wanted neither painting nor re-surfacing, in any theatre.

We then asked those who favored re-surfacing how many times they would do it before replacing the screen with a new one—and again got varying answers!

Said one member: "No limit to the number of applications if properly applied or applied in a manner that does not reduce diameter of holes in the screen. The only dependable method we have found is to apply re-surfacing material with an automatic spray, thus producing an even coat without overlapping and one that is flat white without a sheen."

But another Council member who also approves re-surfacing says: "In my opinion a screen can stand only one treatment." The danger of trying more than one, in this member's opinion, is that "the sound offered to patrons would be of such low quality as to be unbearable."

Taking a stand mid-way between, another member thinks the limit is two or three treatments. Other answers included such as estimates as 6 or 8 treatments.

But one member added:

"The number of times a screen can be re-surfaced depends upon the amount of pigment which has entered the screen perforations. Once the perforations begin to clog, high frequency reproduction from the speaker system is rapidly attenuated."

Another also tried to reconcile this difference of opinion by contributing: "It depends on how well the job is done."

The brave new world of postwar improvements was brought into the picture through references to a new screen re-surfacing device, which was said to produce "a more uniform and competent job"—in addition to eliminating manual problems previously encountered in the application of re-surfacing materials. With respect to this development, however, many members reserved their comment.

The plastic screen—brought forward just before the war but tested in widespread use only through the critical years —was also cited as a definite improvement by some members. But discussion of plastic screens among those who favored them brought out a subsidiary difference of opinion. One view was that "they can be maintained, cleaned or even washed" very successfully; while the opposition contended that in the case of the plastic screen these processes are "more complicated" than with older types.

Brave New World

The more revolutionary improvements so confidently predicted for the postwar era, although not ready for delivery tomorrow morning, are definitely out of the laboratory stage and in the development stage.

American Optical Company has a new coated glass that serves as mirror and also as a transparent medium—both at the same time. This technique in coating glass is now being developed for use in projection lenses. A related innovation, the work of Jim Gibbons of Warner Brothers' studio, is currently in use—a coated glass that makes possible matching the intensity of sunlight streaming into an interior set with the lighting inside, for better photography. Gibbons' coated glass constitutes the window panes. Hooker Company, of Chicago, is in production on a heat-absorbing glass for theatre use.

DeVry's New Sales Manager

William R. Sokel

Western Union has a completely new light source intended to replace the carbon arc, as reported in STR for March 16th, and the theatreman can buy that light source right now. But he would have to adapt it to projection equipment himself. A modified development of this light, ready to install in the projection room, is expected to be on the market in about one year, according to W.U.

OPA is the principal factor still delaying large-scale appearance of television, Dr. Allen B. Du Mont, president of Du Mont Television Laboratories, Inc., told the SMPE two weeks ago.

Bell Telephone Laboratories are improving sound equipment design with the help of a new "tone synthesizer" which duplicates the characteristic tones of the human voice and musical instruments without any recording, merely by means of electronic circuits. With the help of this device the investigators have learned more about sound than was ever known before, including the strange fact that the pitch, loudness and quality of a tone are to some degree dependent on each other, not independent factors as had been thought. Further investigation is expected to reveal new tones, of artistic usefulness, that are not now used because no available musical instruments can create them.

And Dow Corning Corporation's silicon rubber, which retains its resiliency up to temperatures of 500° F. and can insulate 1,100 volts for each 1/1,000th inch of its thickness, is now available in commercial quantities whenever manufacturers of theatre equipment want to use it in their own production.

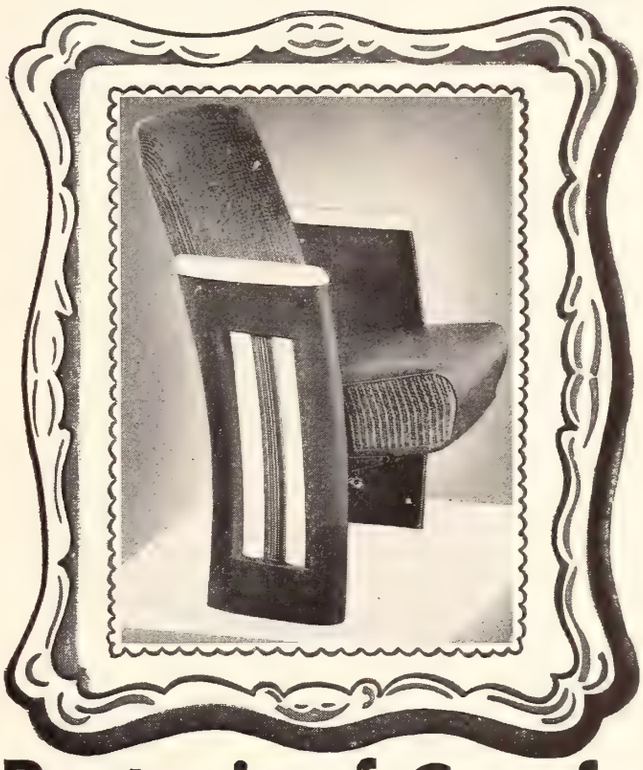
by causing the air to pass over materials such as calcium chloride or silica gel, which have the property of absorbing water. Some of these materials, crystals or powders, need only be sprinkled into an open pan and in a little while they disappear, dissolved in the pool of moisture they have collected out of the air. They can be recovered and used again by boiling off the water.

Dust Removal



Dust, pollen, lint and other coarse contaminating matter is removed from the air by causing it pass through filters of fibrous material. Some of these when they become clogged can be washed and used again. Some are coated with sticky material which helps catch even very fine particles.

In evaporative conditioning, the water spray or trickling washes the air; dust and so on are carried away with the water.

Electronic precipitators work on the principle that opposite charges attract. The air is first blown past metal plates which carry a high-voltage electric charge of one polarity—a d.c. charge. The dust particles that touch these plates or even come close to them acquire the same charge. The air then proceeds past plates charged to the opposite polarity—and the particles adhere to them, remaining there until washed away. Even germs are trapped in this way.

Odors, however, are not necessarily removed from the air by any of these means.

ABC'S OF AIR CONDITIONING

If the chemical responsible for the odor is very soluble in water, it may be caught by the spray in evaporative conditioning; but odorous materials are not always that soluble. Disease-causing viruses, which are vastly smaller than germs, also may not be removed.

Ventilation

No commercial conditioning system restores used-up oxygen or removes excessive carbon dioxide, hence the air must be changed. Ventilation is needed as well as conditioning.

For economy's sake conditionined air is often re-circulated. To pass cooled air through the theatre once and then release it outside is a little like trying to cool all outdoors. The custom is to use the air more than once, adding some fresh air to it each time around. This procedure, however, calls for special precautions with respect to odors, which tend to build up, and perhaps also with respect to germs and viruses.

Simple spray and blower systems often do not resort to re-circulation. First cost and operating costs being lower than those of more complex apparatus, and the cooling in some locations being slight, so that air recovered from the theatre may be practically as warm as outside air, re-circulation becomes of much less importance. These systems may act on a continuous supply of fresh air, which is passed through the theatre only once—a method gets away entirely from any problem of accumulating odors.

Circulation

There are unit air conditioning equipments which involve no duct-work. They are placed at suitable intervals about the theatre; a pump draws warm air through a grill at the bottom, conditions it, and voids it cooled through another grill at the top. Being colder than the air in the house, it diffuses only a short distance before it sinks. Eventually, somewhat warmer, it is drawn back through the lower grill to be cooled again. These devices obviously cannot cover any large area with very much thoroughness. As many of them are used as the theatre needs for coverage, and when the attendance is low those located near empty rows of seats may be switched off as an economy measure.

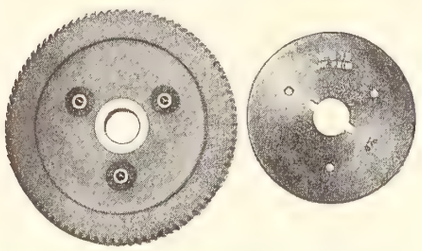
Similar or identical devices may also be installed with ducts leading outdoors to bring in fresh air, and with short runs of inside duct-work to improve the distribution of conditioned air.

In either case the device must be connected to water and sewer pipes, and plugged in to a source of power. A compressor-condenser unit of this kind could also be designed for forced draft of air from outside and back outside, through separate ducts, the forced draft replacing the flow of water in the condenser—an arrangement similar to that used in air-cooled domestic refrigerators.

More elaborate installations commonly include a system of ducts pervading every part of the thetatre, to effect an even withdrawal of used air and an even distribution of the re-conditioned supply. Since this should be done without creating either drafts or hot pockets, diffusing devices are usually added at the duct outlets. This matter is covered in greater detail in a separate article.

Odor Elimination

Odors, small germs and viruses are the subjects of a number of devices, working on a number of different principles.



One set of such mechanisms releases chemical substances either into the theatre or into the air stream inside the conditioning system. Ozone, generated by electrical means, is one chemical used. Chlorophyll, the green material of plants, is another.

A second set of devices act by means of ultra-violet light. These also may be installed either in the theatre or inside the conditioning system. A portion of the oxygen of the air is converted to ozone by the ultra-violet bombardment, thus providing a kind of double action.

A third method adds nothing to the air, whether light or chemicals, but merely removes odors, also perhaps viruses. This method works on the gas mask principle, and like the gas mask requires the air to pass through granules of a very special kind of carbon. This carbon is microscopically porous to an extent that makes a sponge practically a solid by comparison. Contaminating gases are trapped in the carbon by adsorption—surface adhesion—while the air goes through; precisely as in the cannister of a gas mask. This method also can be applied by means of devices either mounted inside the conditioning system or installed in the theatre as entirely separate units. The latter of course have their own internal suction and exhaust fans.

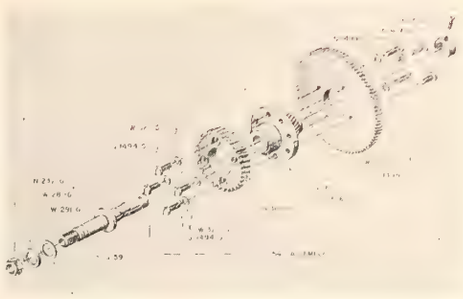
way that the passage of the supply air through them also siphons a series of counter-currents of theatre air back into the cones. These multiple counter-currents carry a quantity of theatre air equal to about 35 per cent of the supply air into the diffuser, where the two air streams mix thoroughly.

In this way, air of any duct velocity passing through this device is pre-mixed

Air-expansion within the cones converts the air velocity into a pressure blanket on the air below. At the same time supply air is pre-mixed with about a third its volume of theatre air before it is spread throughout the theatre in a series of slow-moving, pre-determined blankets—without drafts.

with theatre air and redistributed as a pressure blanket on the theatre air below. The series of cones forming the Anemostat discharge definite proportions of air into the theatre in all directions in a continuous blanket. This low-velocity air-diffusion, together with the air-mixing action, completely eliminates drafts: temperature and humidity are equalized throughout the theatre, the formation of stagnant air-pockets is prevented, and evaporation auras around the human body broken up.



After exhaustive laboratory tests were carried out many years ago, and the results of Anemostat air-diffusion installations were studied, it was discovered that when theatre drafts are eliminated, less erratic operation of the thermostatic control results. Further, that perfected air-diffusion renders the atmospheric changes less noticeable. And lastly, that with properly diffused air, the number and size of the air ducts may be cut, allowing a substantial installation saving.

lation of a liquid or a gas such as air. Convection may be natural or forced.

Convector: A heat transfer surface designed to transfer its heat to surrounding air largely or wholly by convection. Such a surface may or may not be enclosed or concealed when concealed and enclosed the resulting device is sometimes referred to as a concealed radiator.

Degree-Day: A unit, based upon temperature difference and time, used in specifying the nominal heating load in winter. For any one day there exists as many degree-days as there are degrees Fahrenheit difference in temperture between the mean temperature for the day and 65 F.

Dehumidify: To reduce, by any process, the density of water vapor within a given space.

Dehydrate: To separate or to remove water in all forms from matter. Liquid water, hygroscopic water, and water of crystallization or water of hydration are included.

Dew-Point Temperature: The temperature corresponding the saturation (100 per cent relative humidity) for a given moisture content.

Direct-Indirect Heating Unit: A heating unit located in the room or space to be heated and partially enclosed, the enclosed portion being used to heat air which enters from outside the room.

Direct-Return System (Hot Water): A hot water system in which the water, after it has passed through a heating unit, is returned to the boiler along a direct path so that the total distance traveled by the water is the shortest feasible, and so that there are considerable differences in the lengths of the several circuits composing the system.

Down-Feed One-Pipe Riser (Steam): A pipe which carries steam downward to the heating units and into which the condensation from the heating units drains.

Down-Feed System (Steam): A steam heating system in which the supply mains are above the level of the heating units which they serve.

Draft Head (Side Outlet Enclosure): The height of a gravty convector between the bottom of the heating unit and the bottom of the air outlet opening. (Top outlet Enclosure): The height of a gravity convector between the bottom of the heating unit and the top of the enclosure.

Drip: A pipe, or a steam trap and a pipe, considered as a unit, which conducts condensation from the steam side of a piping system to the water or return side of the system.

Dry: (A) To separate or to remove liquid water or water vapor from matter. (B) To separate or to remove any readily condensible vapor from other matter.

Dry Air: In psychrometric work, dry air is defined as air without water vapor. This state, though not obtained practically, is used as the basis of calculations.

Dry-Bulb Temperature: The temperature indicated by a standardized thermometer after correction for radiation, etc.

Dry Return: A return pipe in a steam heating system which carries both water of condensation and air. The dry return is above the level of the water line in the boiler in a gravity system.

Dynamic Head or Pressure: Same as Total Pressure.

Effective Temperature: An arbitrary index which combines into a single value the effect of temperature, humidity, and movement of air on the degree of warmth or cold felt by the human body. The numerical value is that of the temperature of still, saturated air which would induce an identical sensation of warmth.

Enthalpy: Enthalpy was formerly called heat content, sometimes total heat. It is a thermodynamic property which serves as a measure of the quantity of thermal energy convected by a fluid in steady flow. In a non-flow process the increase of enthalpy equals the quantity of heat absorbed provided pressure is constant. Specific enthalpy is the raito of total enthalpy to total weight, that is, enthalpy per unit weight of substance BTU per pound.

Entropy: Entropy is the ratio of the heat added to a substance to the absolute temperature at which it is added. It is a thermodynamic property which, for practical purposes, is best defined by stating its principal functions: (1) during a reversible adiabatic change of state, entropy is constant; (2) during a reversible isothermal change of state, the heat absorbed is equal to absolute temperature times change of entropy. Specific entropy is the ratio of total entropy to total weight, that is, entropy per unit weight, BTU per degree Fahrenheit per pound.

Equivalent Evaporation: The amount of water a boiler would evaporate, in pounds per hour, if it received feed water at 212 F and vaporized it at the same temperature and atmospheric pressure.

Estimated Design Load: The sum of the heat emission of the equivalent direct radiation to be installed plus the allowance for heat loss of the connecting piping plus the heat requirements of any auxiliary apparatus connected with the system.

Estimated Maximum Load: The load stated in BTU per hour or equivalent direct radiation that has been estimated to be the greatest or maximum load that the boiler will be called upon to carry.

Extended Heating Surface: See Heating Surface.

Extended Surface Heating Unit: A heating unit having a relatively large amount of extended surface which may be integral with the core containing the heating medium or assembled over such a core, making good thermal contact by pressure or by being soldered to the core or by both pressure and soldering. An extended surface heating unit is usually placed within an enclosure and therefore functions as a convector.

Fan Furnace System: See Warm Air Heating System.

Free Enthalpy: A thermodynamic property which serves as a measure of the availble energy of a system with respect to surroundings at the same temperature and same pressure as that of the system. No process involving an increase in avlable energy can occur spontaneously.

Fumes: Particles of solid matter resulting from such chemical processes as combustion, explosion, and distillation, ranging from 0.1 to 1.0 micron in size.

Furnace: That part of a boiler or warm air heating plnt in which combustion takes place. Also a complete heating unit for transferring heat from fuel being burned to the air supplied to a heating system.

Furnace Volume (Total): The total furnace volume for horizontal-return tubular boilers and water-tube boilers is the cubical contents of the furnace between the grate and the first plane of entry into or between tubes. It therefore includes the volume behind the bridge wall as in ordinary horizontal-return tubular boiler settings, unless manifestly ineffective (i.e. no gas flow taking place through it), as in the case of waste-heat boilers with auxiliary coal furnaces, where one part of the furnace is out of action when the other is being used. For Scotch or other internally fired boilers it is the cubical contents of the furnace, flues and combustion chamber, up to the plane of first entry into the tubes.

Gage Pressure: Pressure measured from atmospheric pressure as a base. Gage pressure may be indicated by a manometer which has one leg connected to the pressure source and the other exposed to atmospheric pressure.

Grate Area: The area of the grate surface, measured in square feet, to be used in estimating the rate of burning fuel. This area is contrued to mean the area measured in the plne of the to psurface of the grate, except that with special furnaces, such as those having magazine feed, or special shapes, the grate area shall be the mean area of the active prt of the fuel bed taken perpendicular to the path of the gases through it. For furnaces having a secondary grate, such as those in double-grate down draft boilers, the effective area shall be taken as the area of the upper grate plus one-eighth of the area of the lower grate, both areas being estimated as previously defined.

Heating Medium: A substance such as water, steam, air or furnace gas used to convey heat from the boiler, furnace or other source of heat or energy to the heating unit from which the heat is dissipated.

Heating Surface: The exterior surface of a heating unit. Extended heating surface (or extended surface): Heating surface consisting of fins, pins or ribs which receive heat by conduction from the prime surface. Prime Surface: Heating surface having the heating medium on one side and air (or extended surface) on the other.

Heat of the Liquid: This can usually be interpreted as the specific enthalpy of saturated liquid.

Hot Water Heating System: A heating system in which water is used as the medium by which heat is carried through pipes from the boiler to the heating units.

Humid Heat: Ratio of increase of enthalpy per pound of dry air to rise of temperature under conditions of constant pressure and constant humidity ratio.

Humidistat: A regulatory device, actuated by changes in humidity, used for the automatic control of relative humidity.

Humidity: Water vapor when mixed with dry air or other diluent gases. Absolute humidity is the weight of water vapor per unit volume of moist air, pounds per cubic foot. It can be calculated by dividing the humidity ratio, weight of water vapor per pound of dry air, by the volume of the mixture per pound of dry air. Relatfve humidity is the ratio of the partial pressure of the water vapor in the air to the saturation pressure of the pure water corresponding to the actual temperature.

Humidity Ratio: Weight of water vapor per pound of dry air. (Formerly called specific humidity.)

Hygrostat: Same as Humidistat.

Inch of Water: The pressure due to a column of liquid water one inch high at a temperature of 60 F.

Insulation (Heat): A material having a relatively high heat-resistance per unit of thickness.

Isobaric: An adjective used to indicate a change taking place at constant pressure.

Isothermal: An adjective used to indicate a change taking place at constant temperature.

Latent Heat: Latent heat is the heat required to produce a change of state at constant temperature. The most general interpretation is heat absorbed at constant temperature. More specifically the latent heat of vaporization is the difference between the specific enthalpies of saturated vapor and saturated liquid at the same temperature (and, for a pure substance, the same pressure). Latent heat of sublimation is the difference between the specific enthalpies of saturated vapor and saturated solid at the same temperature. Latent heat of fusion is the difference between the specific enthalpies of saturated liquid and saturated solid at the same temperature.

Laws of Thermodynamics: The Law of Conservation of Energy states that energy, in any of its forms, can neither be created nor destroyed. As a corrollary to this, the First Law of Thermodynamics states that in any power cycle or refrigeration cycle the net heat absorbed by the working substance is exactly equal to the net work done. The Second Law of Thermodynamics states that a power cycle which absorbs heat at a single temperature and converts it wholly into work, as required by the First Law, is impossible; hence it is absolutely necessary to reject heat at some lower temperature if any work is to be done. The Second Law further prescribes the least possible quantity of heat that must be so rejected depending on the two temperatures involved.

Manometer: An instrument for measuring pressures; essentially a U-tube partially filled with a liquid, usually water, mercury, or a light oil, so the amount of displacement of the liquid indicates the pressure being exerted on the instrument.

Mass: The quantity of matter, in pounds, to which the unit of force (one pound) will give an acceleration of one foot per second per second.

Mb,Mbh: Symbols which represent, respectively, 1000 BTU and 1000 BTU per hour.

Mechanical Equivalent of Heat: The conversion factor from BTU to foot pounds; J = 778.3 foot pounds per BTU. This is also referred to as Joule's Equivalent.

Micron: A unit of length, the thousandth part of one millimeter or the millionth of a meter.

Mol (Pound Mol): A weight in pounds numerically equal to the molecular weight of a substance. In the case of gases, and at not too high pressures, the volume of 1 mol is approximately the same for any gas at the same temperature and pressure. At 32 F and standard atmospheric pressure this volume is 358.65 cu. ft.

One-Pipe Supply Riser (Steam): A pipe which carries steam upward to a heating unit and which also carries the condensation from the heating unit in a direction opposite to the steam flow.

One-Pipe System (Hot Water): A hot water system in which the cooled water from the heating units is returned to the supply main. Consequently, the heating units farthest from the boiler are supplied with cooler water than those near the boiler in the same circuit.

One-Pipe System (Steam): A steam heating system consisting of a main circuit in which the steam and condensate flow in the same pipe, usually in opposite directions. Ordinarily to each heating unit there is but one connection which must serve as both the supply and the return, although separate supply and return connections may be used.

Overhead System: Any steam or hot water system in which the supply main is above the heating units. With a steam system the return must be below the heating units; with a water system, the return may be above the heating units.

Panel Radiator: A heating unit placed on or flush with a flat wall surface and intended to function essentially as a radiator.

Plenum Chamber: An air compartment maintained under pressure and connected to one or more distributing ducts.

Potentiometer: An instrument for measuring or comparing small electromotive forces.

Power: The rate of performing work; usually expressed in units of horsepower, BTU per hour, or watts.

Prime Surface: See Heating Surface.

Psychrometer: An instrument for ascertaining the humidity or hygrometric state of the atmosphere. Psychrometric: Pertaining to psychrometry or the state of the atmosphere as to moisture. Psychrometry; The branch of physics that treats of the measurement of degree of moisture, especially the moisture mixed with the air.

Pyrometer: An instrument for measuring high temperatures.

Radiant Heating (Panel Heating): A method of heating involving the installation of the heating units (pipe coils) within the wall, floor or ceiling of the room so that the heating process takes place mainly by radiation from the wall, floor or ceiling surfaces to the objects in the room. Panel heating also refers to a system transmitting heat by both radiation and convection to both air and surrounding surfaces, while radiant heating refers to a system dependent on radiation alone in which case only the heat radiated from the panel is effective for heating purpose.

Radiation: The transmission of heat through space by wave motion.

Radiator: A heating unit exposed to view within the room or space to be heated. A radiator transfers heat by radiation to objects within visible range and by conduction to the surrounding air which in turn is circulated by natural convection; a so-called radiator is also a convector but the single term radiator has been established by long usage.

Recessed Raditator: A heating unit set back into a wall recess but not enclosed.

Refrigerant: A substance which produces a refrigerating effect by its absorption of heat while expanding or vaporizing.

Relative Humidity: See Humidity.

Return Mains: The pipes which return the heating medium from the heating units to the source of heat supply.

Reversed-Return System (Hot Water): A hot water heating system in which the water from several heating units is returned along paths arranged so that all circuits composing the system or composing a major sub-division of the system are practically of equal length.

Saturated Air: A mixture of dry air and saturated water vapor, all at the same dry-bulb temperature. It may also be considered as air containing the maximum possible amount of water vapor at a given temperature without becoming supersaturated.

Saturation: The condition for coexistence in stable equiiibrium of two or more distinct phases, such as steam over the water from which it is being generated.

Saturation Pressure: The saturation pressure for a pure substance for any given temperature is that pressure at which vapor and liquid or vapor and solid can coexist in stable equilibrium.

Sensible Heat: Heat which manifests itself by temperature change.

Smoke: Carbon or soot particles less than 0.1 micron in size which result from the incomplete combustion of carbonaceous materials such as coal, oil, tar and tobacco.

Smokeless Arch: An inverted baffle placed in an updraft furnace toward the rear to aid in mixing the gases of combustion and thereby to reduce the smoke produced.

Specific Enthalpy: The ratio of total enthalpy to total weight. The specific enthalpy of air is its enthalpy, BTU per pound, measured above 0 F and 29.921 in. Hg as a reference point. The specific enthalpy of water is its enthalpy, BTU per pound, measured from the reference point of saturated liquid at 32 F. (See Enthalpy.)

Specific Gravity: The ratio of the weight of a body to the weight of an equal volume of water at some standard temperature, usually 39.2 F.

Specific Heat: The ratio of heat absorbed per unit weight of substance to temperature rise. For gases, both specific heat at constant pressure, cp, and specific heat at constant volume, cv, are frequently given. In air conditioning, cp is usually used.

Specific Volume: The volume, expressed in cubic feet, of one pound of a substance.

Split System: A system in which the heating and ventilating are accomplished by means of radiators or convectors supplemented by mechanical circulation of air (heated or unheated) from a central point.

Square Foot of Heating Surface (Equivalent): Equivalent Direct Radiation (EDR). The amount of heating surface which will give off 240 BTU per hour. The equivalent square feet of heating surface may have no direct relation to the actual surface area.

Stack Height: The height of a gravity convector between the bottom of the heating unit and the top of the outlet opening.

Standard Air: Air weighing 0.075 lb. per cubic foot. (The density of air at 29.921 in. Hg barometric pressure, 68 F dry-bulb and 50 per cent relative humidity is 0.07497; and dry air at 70 F dry-bulb is 0,07496.)

Static Pressure: The normal force per unit area that would be exerted by a moving fluid on a small body immersed in it if the body were carried along with the fluid. Practically, it is the normal force per unit area at a small hole in a wall of the duct through which the fluid flows (piezometer) or on the surface of a stationary tube at a point where the disturbances created by inserting the tube cancel. It is supposed that the thermodynamic properties of a moving fluid depend on static pressure in exactly the same manner as those of the same fluid at rest depend upon its uniform hydrostatic pressure.

Steam: Water in the vapor phase. Dry Saturated Steam is steam at the saturation temperature corresponding to the pressure, and containing no water in suspension. Wet Saturated Steam is steam at the saturation temperature corresponding to the pressure, and containing water particles in suspension. Superheated Steam is steam at a temperature higher than the saturation temperature corresponding to the pressure.

Steam Heating System: A heating system in which heat is transferred from the boiler or other source of steam to the heating units by means of steam at, above, or below atmospheric pressure.

Steam Trap: A device for allowing the passage of condensate and preventing the passage of steam, or for allowing the passage of air as well as condensate.

Superheated Steam: See Steam.

Supply Mains (Steam): The pipes through which the steam flows from the boiler or source of supply to the run-outs and risers leading to the heating units.

Surface Conductance: The amount of heat (BTU) transmitted by radiation, conduction, and convection from a surface to the air or liquid surrounding it, or vice versa, in one hour per square foot of surface for a difference in temperature of 1 deg. between the surface and the surrounding air or liquid.

Therm: 100,000 BTU. (Used in the gas industry.)

Thermal Resistance: The reciprocal of conductance.

Thermal Resistivity: The reciprocal of conductivity.

Ton of Refrigeration: The removal of 12,000 BTU of heat per hour at a low temperature.

Ton Day of Refrigeration: The removal of 288,000 BTU of heat at a low temperature.

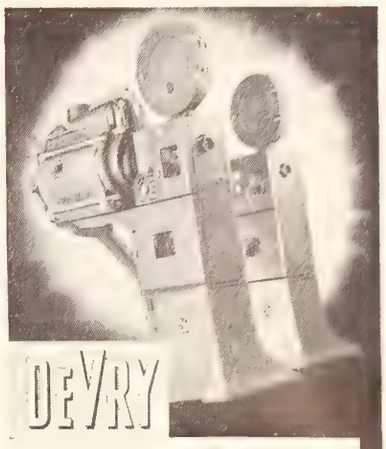
Total Heat: This can usually be interpreted as increase of enthalpy at constant pressure. It is often regarded as synonymous with enthalpy.

Total Pressure: In the theory of the flow of fluids; the sum of the static pressure and the velocity pressure at the point of measurement.

Tube (or Tubular) Radiator: A cast-iron heating unit used as a radiator and having small vertical tubes.

Two-Pipe System (Steam or Water): A heating system in which one pipe is used for the supply of the heating medium to the heating unit and another for the return of the heating medium to the source of heat supply. The essential feature of a two-pipe system is that each heating unit receives a direct supply of the heating medium which medium cannot have served a preceding heating unit.

Underfeed Distribution System (Hot Water): A hot water heating system in which the main flow pipe is below the heating unit.



Underfeed Stoker: A stoker which feeds the coal underneath the fuel bed.

Unit: As applied to heating, ventilating and air condtioning equipment this word means factory-built and assembled equipment with apparatus for accomplishing some specified function or combination or functions.

It is loosely applied to a great vriety of equipment. Usually the function is included in the name, and hence come terms like Unit Heater, Unit Ventilator, Humidifying Unit, and Air Conditioning Unit.

Units are said to be direct or room, when intended for location, or located in, the treated space; indirect or remote, when outside or adjacent to the treated space. They are ceiling units when suspended from

Lester Isaac Completes 30 Years with Loew's

LESTER ISAAC has just completed his 30th year with Loew's, Inc.

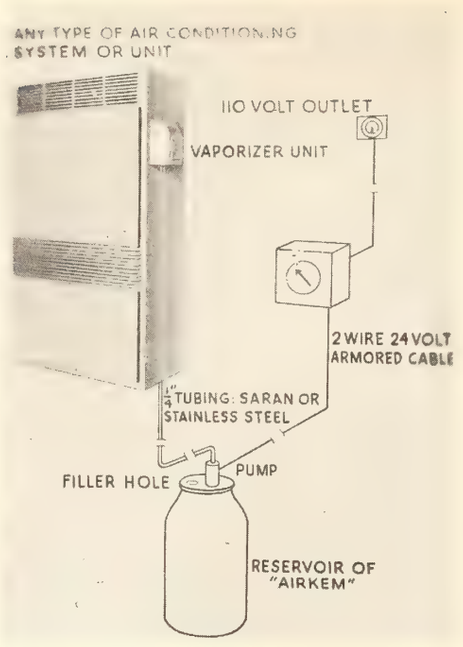
The quality and cost of Loew's projection and sound are wholly in his hand. He has 1,200 men and 215 theatres under him. His department also takes care of stage lighting and stage draperies, and of all maintenance of electric wiring from the street in.

Isaac started in show business 32 years ago as a reel boy, to help earn his way through medical school. His older brother, a projectionist, got him the job. Later,

Lester Isaac

William C. Ritz, a projectionist in Washington, D. C., taught Lester to operate. Ritz is still a projectionist in Washington; the two are still close friends. Young Lester never did finish medical school. Show business was too attractive. He joined the Loew organization as a projectionist in the Columbia Theatre, Washington, in 1916.

Among technical highlights of his career to date, Lester Isaac was the first to use coated lenses. In fact, he appreciated their value so promptly and got his orders in so fast, that for a time he cornered the market—no one else could get any coated lenses until Loew's prior orders had been filled. He was the first to use a Magnascope screen, in 1918. He was the first to use a high intensity lamp (made by Sperry), in 1920. He was the first to use fused quartz condensers, then made by G.E. And for the Atlanta premier of "Gone With the Wind" he succeeded in persuading the authorities to change municipal regulations and let him use green exit lights, because he believed the red ones distracted attention from the picture.



Subordinates, projectionists, projection executives, union leaders, salesmen offering new equipment—all concerned with projection and sound who enter Lester Isaac's group of offices at 1540 Broadway are faced with a huge painted sign they cannot possibly overlook. It reads:

The Show Must Go on and STAY on

Air Conditioning Anti-Trust Decree Will Not Change Prices, Quality

Price and quality of air conditioning equipment and policies and terms of sale, will remain completely unchanged by the recent consent decree dedicating certain air conditioning patents to the public, according to leading manufacturers.

The decree, resulting from a civil action brought by U. S. Attorney General Tom C. Clark under Sherman Act, was entered in the U. S. District Court in New York.

American Blower Corporation and York Corporation both state that this development will make no difference in prices, quality of equipment, or policies under which motion picture theatres buy conditioning equipment.

Westinghouse declares that the patents in question are now of no material significance, "because they have expired or have been supplanted by newer developments," and goes on to say:

"It is not expected that the dedication of these patents or any other provisions of the consent decree will materially affect our operations in the future with respect to prices, or quality of equipment.

"Westinghouse's answer to the demand for quality air conditioning equipment for the entertainment world, has been the merger in 1945 of its Air Conditioning Division into the B. F. Sturtevant Company, one of the best known air handling companies in the United States.

"The uniting of Sturtevant's mechanical and air handling experience with Westinghouse devolpments in air conditioning and complete resources in the electrical field will result in the most complete research, production and marketing organization in the air conditioning and air handling industry."

Lancaster, Pa. Harry Chertchoff, operator of Strand, Lancaster, and theatres in Mount Joy, Elizabethtown and Lititz, Pa., announced plans to build $150,000, 1000 seat theatre at 341-47 East King Street, Lancaster.

above, and floor when supported from below. Other descriptive words include free delivery when the unit is not intended to be attached to ducts or similar resistance-producing devices, and pressure when for use with such ducts. Complete description requires the use of several of these qualifying words or phases.

Up-Feed System (Steam): A steam heating system in which the supply mains are below the level of the heating units which they serve.

Vacuum Heating System: A two-pipe steam heating system equipped with the necessary accessory apparatus which will permit operating the system below atmospheric pressure when desired.

Vapor: Any substance in the gaseous state.

Vapor Heating System: A steam heating system which operates under pressures at or near atmospheric and which returns the condensation to the boiler or receiver by gravity. Vapor systems have thermostatic traps or others means of resistance on the return ends of the heating units for preventing steam from entering the return mains; they also have a pressure-equalizing and air-eliminating device at the end of the dry return. Direct Vent Vapor System: A vapor heating system with air valves which do not permit re-entry of air.

Vapor Pressure: Synonymous with saturation pressure in the case of a pure substance.

Velocity: The time rate of motion of a body in a fixed direction. In the fps system it is expressed in units of one foot per second.

Velocity Pressure: The difference due to velocity between total pressure and static pressure. It is supposed to equal the kinetic energy per unit volume of the fluid at the point of measurement.

Ventilation: The process of supplying or removing air by natural or mechanical means, to or from any space. Such air may or may not have been conditioned. (See air conditioning.)

Warm Air Heating System: A warm air heating plant consists of a heating unit (fuel burning furnace) enclosed in a casing, from which the heated air is distributed to the various rooms of the building through ducts. If the motive head producing flow depends on the difference in weight between the heated air leaving the casing and the cooler air entering the bottom of the casing, it is termed a gravity system. A booster fan may, however, be used in conjunction with a gravity-designed system. If a fan is used to produce circulation and the system is designed especially for fan circulation, it is termed a fan furnace system or a central fan furnace system. A fan furnace system may include air washers and filters.

Wet-Bulb Temperature: Thermodynamic wet-bulb temperature is the temperature at which liquid or solid water, by evaporating into air, can bring the air to saturation, adiabatically at the same temperature. Wet-bulb temperature (without qualification) is the temperature indicated by a wet-bulb psychrometer constructed and used according to specifications.

Wet Return: That part of a return main of a steam heating system which is filled with water of condensation. The wet return usually is below the level of the water line in the boiler, although not necessarily so (See Dry Return.)
